Front. Vol. I.

S. Wale inv. et del.

Space Saylor fouls

Front. Vol. I.

S. Wale inv. et del.

Space Saylor fouls

CLARISSA;

K OR, THE

H I S T O R Y

OF A

YOUNG LADY:

COMPREHENDING

THE MOST IMPORTANT CONCERNS

PRIVATE LIFE.

AND PARTICULARLY SHEWING

THE DISTRESSES THAT MAY ATTEND THE MISCONDUCT.

BOTH OF

PARENTS AND CHILDREN,

IN RELATION TO MARRIAGE.

IN EIGHT VOLUMES.

VOL. I.

A NEW EDITION.

LONDON:

PRINTED FOR J. F. AND C. RIVINGTON, T. DAVIES, B. LAW, T. CADELL, G. ROBINSON, R. BALDWIN, J. JOHNSON, W. GOLDSMITH, W. LOWNDES, J. KNOX, W. FOX, G.AND T.WILKIE, P. MAQUEEN, AND E. NEWBERY.

MDCCLXXXV.

(475年)、1877年(4)

TERRORDS TO AN ARRAY OF THE SECOND

THE STATE

Dogerous Elect 19 man house to the same of A. PARTY WAS CHIEBRERS respective and an experience of the service of MONTO NUMBER AND ASSESSMENT OF A THREE BASE 23, 电极力量电力

4 Police and business and the last which is ancies in marks envision was not not direct to Anna agence of the manual of the anna of the contract of the the particular and the same of the same of

ACTIVITY AND ACTIVITY THE PROPERTY OF ALL.

SONNET

To the AUTHOR of CLARISSA.

O Master of the heart! whose magic skill

The close recesses of the Soul can find,
Can rouse, becalm, and terrify the mind, Now melt with pity, now with anguish thrill;

Thy moral page while virtuous precepts fill, Warm from the heart, to mend the Age defign'd, Wit, strength, truth, decency, are all combin'd
To lead our Youth to Good, and guard from Ill.

O long enjoy what thou so well hast won,
The grateful tribute of each honest heart, Sincere, nor hackney'd in the ways of men;
At each distressful stroke their true tears run;
And Nature, unsophisticate by Art, Owns and applauds the labours of thy pen.

SONRET

To the Adrion of CLARISSA.

O Valer ef the broad whole mapped follow The close receptances the South care find, Can route, hecales, and tairify the mind, November with pitty may were as with the differ

I by moral page whole viersour precupit fill, Warm from the heave, to stand, the Ago defigit?, Wit, firingth, truth, discharge, we all enabled To lead our Youth to Doce, and goard from fil.

O long enjoy that there is well hell won.

The grateful cribble of each honest heart.

Sinceir, nor hackney'd in the ways of men;
At each diffressful fired a their way cours run;
And Nature, untople dicate by An,

Owns and applaude the chouse of thy pan.

and the control of the state of the care

E

1.

PREFACE.

HE following History is given in a Series of Letters written principally in a double yet separate correspondence;

Between two young Ladies of virtue and honour, bearing an inviolable friendship for each other, and writing not merely for amulement, but upon the most interesting subjects; in which every private family, more or less, may find itself concern'd: And,

A 3

Between

Driveco

Between two Gentlemen of free lives; one of them glorying in his talents for Stratagem and Invention, and communicating to the other, in confidence, all the secret purposes of an intrigueing head and resolute heart.

But here it will be proper to observe, for the sake of such as may apprehend hurt to the morals of Youth, from the more freely written Letters, that the Gentlemen, tho' professed Libertines as to the Female Sex, and making it one of their wicked maxims, to keep no faith with any of the individuals of it, who are thrown into their power, are not, however, either Insidels or Scoffers; nor yet such as think themselves freed from the observance of those other moral duties which bind man to man.

On the contrary, it will be found, in the progress of the Work, that they very often make such reflections upon each other, and each upon himself and his own actions, as reasonable beings must make, who disbelieve not a future State of Rewards and Punishments, and who one day propose to reform—One of them actually reforming, and by that means giving an opportunity to censure the freedoms which fall from the gayer pen and lighter heart of the other.

And

DEL

h

n

t

i

C

c

1

in

P

e

P

n

S

d

1

0

t

C

P

a

h

ne

m

he

of

he

10-

en

ng

no

ho

er,

as

of

to

he

en

nd

aot

ts,

of

ns

ns

art

nd

And yet that other, altho in unbosoming himself to a select friend, he discover wickedness enough to entitle him to general detestation, preserves a decency, as well in his images, as in his language, which is not always to be found in the works of some of the most celebrated modern Writers, whose subjects and characters have less warranted the liberties they have taken.

In the Letters of the two young Ladies, it is presumed will be found not only the highest exercise of a reasonable and prasticable Friendship, between minds endowed with the noblest principles of Virtue and Religion, but occasionally interspersed, such Delicacy of Sentiments, particularly with regard to the other Sex; such instances of Impartiality, each freely, as a fundamental principle of their friendship, blaming, praising, and setting right the other, as are strongly to be recommended to the observation of the younger part (more especially) of Female Readers.

The principle of these two young Ladies is proposed as an Examplar to her Sex. Nor is it any objection to her being so, that she is not in all respects a perfect character. It was not only natural, but it was necessary, that she should have some faults, were it only to shew the Reader,

der, how laudably the could mistrust and blame herfelf, and carry to her own heart, divelted of felf-partiality, the centure which arose from her own convictions, and that even the acquittal of those, because revered characters, whom no one elfe would acquit, and to whose much greater faults her errors were owing, and not to a weak or reproachable As far as is confiftent with human frailty, and as far as she could be perfect, confidering the people she had to deal with, and those with whom she was inseparably connected, the is perfect. To have been impercable, must have left nothing for the Divine Grace and a Purified State to do, and carried our idea of her from woman to angel. As such is the often efteemed by the man whose beart was fo corrupt, that he could hardly believe human nature capable of the purity, which, on every trial or temptation, shone out in bers.

Besides the sour principal persons, several others are introduced, whose Letters are characteristic: And it is presumed that there will be found in some of them, but more especially in those of the chief character among the men, and the second character among the women, soch strokes of Gaiety, Fancy, and Humour, so will entertain and divert; and at the same sime both warmand instruct.

All

di

of

ei

ti

n

ai tl

a iı

-

and

t, di-

hich

even cha-

and were able

man

con-

and

ble,

race

our h is

was

·u-

on ral

ha-

rill lly

en,

n,

ır,

ne

11

All the Letters are written while the hearts of the writers must be supposed to be wholly engaged in their subjects (The events at the time generally dubious): So that they abound not only with critical Situations, but with what may be called instantaneous Descriptions and Resections (proper to be brought home to the breast of the youthful reader); as also with affecting Conversations; many of them written in the dialogue or dramatic way.

"Much more lively and affecting, says one of the principal characters (Vol. VII. p. 73.) must be the Style of those who write in the height of a present distress; the mind tor-tured by the pangs of uncertainty (the Events then hidden in the womb of Fate); than the dry, narrative, unanimated Style of a person relating difficulties and dangers furmounted, can be; the relater persectly at ease; and if himself unmoved by his own Story, not likely greatly to affect the Reader."

What will be found to be more particularly aimed at in the following Work, is—To warn the Inconfiderate and Thoughtless of the one Sex, against the base arts and designs of specious Contrivers of the other—To caution Parents against the undue exercise of their natural authority

ma

wa

Hi

the tho

wi

be defi

thority over their children in the great article of Marriage—To warn Children against preferring a Man of Pleasure to a Man of Probity, upon that dangerous but too commonly received notion, That a reformed Rake makes the best Husband—But above all, To investigate the highest and most important Doctrines not only of Morality, but of Christianity, by shewing them thrown into action in the conduct of the worthy characters; while the unworthy, who set those Doctrines at defiance, are condignly, and, as may be said, consequentially, punished.

From what has been said, considerate Readers will not enter upon the perusal of the Piece before them, as if it were designed only to divert and amuse. It will probably be thought tedious to all such as dip into it, expecting a light Novel, or transitory Romance; and look upon Story in it (interesting as that is generally allowed to be) as its sole end, rather than as a vehicle to the Instruction.

Different persons, as might be expected, have been of different opinions, in relation to the conduct of the Heroine in particular Situations; and several worthy persons have objected to the general Catastrophe, and other parts of the History. Whatever is thought material

icle

ore-

ity,

re-

the

ate

not

-W

of by,

only,

ea-

the

nly

be

X-

2; at

er

d.

to Si-

ber ht al

Call Will Miles

Laborate Control

AND AND AND ADDRESS A

THE BARRY

Chicago San San

13 192 CALST ST. 18

MES Floury No.

Mee. Moore .. Charles Harrisons

A bral

material of these shall be taken notice of by way of Postscript, at the conclusion of the History; for this Work being addressed to the Public as a Hiftery of Life and Manners, those parts of it which are proposed to carry with them the force of an Example, ought to be as unobjectible as is confiftent with the defign of the whole, and with bumen nature.

Library Liberton County of Mr. Landien.

mall the shoot religion to program cards at these

A dende party Combound apply Mine A Call Control Willes of the tours of the

The second state of the second second of the No most Sagare at the vity Hank.

The standing resident and the second resident and the second seco

The stated Memorial Prince to the Linches Mir Leviller.

Millimeters of Lors Me.

A new balletion of the statutages.

Constantion of Children the Maries of Mile Below.

The most laterage Petrol Carpetalous and

NAMES

NAMES of the PRINCIPAL PERSONS.

Mile Cleriffe Harlane, Robert Levelace, E.G.; Yames Harlanie, E.fq.; Ann. Harlows, Arabello, John Harlows, Elq; Array Harlows, per Solmer Bigi Meni Herpey, 17 Mili Dolig Hervey, Mrs. Judith Norton, Col. Wm. Morden, Mis Hor Mrs. Howe, Charles Hickman, Lord M.. Lady Sarah Sadlier, Lady Besty Lawrence, Mile Charl. Montague, les Hickman, Mils Patty Montague, t. Lewen, tr. Elies Brand, Dr. H. Mr. Goddard, John Belford, Efq; Richard Mowbray, Thomas Doleman, Yames Tourville, Thomas Belton, Mrs. More, Mife Rawlins, Mrs. Bevn, Capt. Tomlinfon, Sally Marion, Poly Horton, Dercas Wyker, Martin, Mrs. Sinclair,

A young Lady of great Beauty and Merit. ther of Clariffa. His Lady.
Their only Son.
Their elder Daughter, Elder Brother of James Harlowe, fen.
Third Brother.
An Admirer of Clariffa, favoured by her Friends.

Her Daughter.

A Woman of great Piety and Diferetion, who had a principal Share in the Education of A near Relation of the Harlowes.

15.00

34

- 8

1 20

M

Far

the

cafi

wha

mer

ever

fron

upo

as fe M

first

The most intimate Friend, Companion, and Correspondent of Clarissa. Her Mother. An Admirer of Miss Howe. Uncle to Mr. Lovelace.

Half-fifters of Lord M.

Nieces of the same Nobleman.

An money and kilful Apothecary, Mr. Love are principal Intimate and Confidant.

Efers. Libertine Friends of Mr. Lovelace.

A Widow, keeping a Lodging-house at Ham-

A notable young Gentlewoman there. A lively young Widow of the same Place. The pretended Name of a private Brothelkeeper at London. The affumed Name of a vile Pander to the Debaucheries of Mr. Lovelace. Affiftants of, and Partners with, the infamous Sinclair.

An artful Servant at the vile House.

THE

NAMES

A $ 3.0 A - 2

Sin

110 ho

and

am-

infa-

H . I So of That! O with the K. Y.

have very landy tor-sig Sectionaries her said hier when the mean in period to enquese after your Heat there health, and to expedit his concern for what

CLARISSA HARLOWE.

constitute his Swied : And that distrettion Bresher's pair corner in his power.

Lines, it am orth, pres L O V . Levelace and upon corner in the property of the contract of the con

LETTER

defined a referred me too more assume

Mis Anna Howe, To Mis Clarissa Harlows.

.bione sifar. to loot

AM extremely concerned, my dearest Friend, for the disturbances that have happened in your. Family. I know how it must hurt you to become the subject of the public talk: And yet upon an occasion so generally known, it is impossible but that whatever relates to a young Lady whose distinguished merits have made her the public care, should engage every-body's attention. I long to have the particulars from yourself; and of the usage I am told you receive upon an accident you could not help; and in which, as far as I can learn, the Sufferer was the Aggressor.

Mr. Diggs, the Surgeon, whom I fent for at the first hearing of the Rencounter, to enquire, for your Vol. I. B

n

in

ye

m

po

th

vi

on

en

tic

tal

co

Ou U

no wi

Ur

YOU

to

COL

wa:

duc of whi

plin

a L

You

ftor

fake, how your Brother was, told me, That there was no danger from the Wound, if there were none from the Fever; which it feems has been increased by the perturbation of his spirits.

Mr. Wyerley drank Tea with us yesterday; and tho' he is far from being partial to Mr. Lovelace, as it may be well supposed, yet both he and Mr. Symmes blame your family for the treatment they gave him when he went in person to enquire after your Brother's health, and to express his concern for what had happened.

They say, That Mr. Lovelace could not avoid drawing his Sword: And that either your Brother's unskilfulness or passion, left him from the very first pals entirely in his power.

This, I am told, was what Mr. Lovelace faid upon it; retreating as he spoke: 'Have a care, 'Mr. Harlowe—Your violence puts you out of your defence. You give me too much advantage. For your Sister's sake, I will pass by every thing:—if—'

But this the more provoked his rashness, to lay himself open to the advantage of his adversary— Who, after a slight wound given him in the arm, took away his Sword.

£37.51

There are people who love not your Brother, because of his natural imperiousness and sierce and uncontroulable temper: These say, That the young gentleman's passion was abated on seeing his blood gush plentifully down his arm; and that he received the generous offices of his adversary (who helped him off with his coat and waistcoat, and bound up his arm, till the surgeon could come) with such patience, as was far from making a visit afterwards from that adversary to enquire after his health, appear either insulting or improper.

Be this as it may, every-body pities you. So fleady, fo uniform in your conduct: So defirous, as you always

.

1

d

ś

S

n

-

t

d

s

ft

d

e,

of 1-ry

ay

n,

en-

ng

od

ed

im his

ce,

hat

her

dy,

al-

ays

fall

ways said, of sliding through life to the end of it unnoted; and, as I may add, not wishing to be observed even for your silent benevolence; sufficiently happy in the noble consciousness which attends it: Rather useful than glaring, your deserved motto; the now, to your regret, pushed into blaze, as I may say: and yet blamed at home for the faults of others—How must such a virtue suffer on every hand!—Yet it must be allowed, that your present trial is but proportioned to your prudence.

As all your friends without doors are apprehensive that some other unhappy event may result from so violent a contention, in which it seems the Families on both sides are now engaged, I must desire you to enable me, on the authority of your own information, to do you occasional justice.

My Mother, and all of us, like the rest of the world, talk of nobody but you on this occasion, and of the consequences which may follow from the resentments of a man of Mr. Lovelace's spirit; who, as he gives out, has been treated with high indignity by your Uncles. My Mother will have it, that you cannot now, with any decency, either see him, or correspond with him. She is a good deal prepossessed by your Uncle Antony; who occasionally calls upon us, as you know; and on this Rencounter, has represented to her the crime which it would be in a Sister to encourage a man who is to wade into her favour (this was his expression) thro' the blood of her Brother.

Write to me therefore, my dear, the whole of your flory from the time that Mr. Lovelace was first introduced into your family; and particularly an account of all that passed between him and your Sister; about which there are different reports; some people scrupling not to infinuate that the younger Sister has stolen a Lover from the elder. And pray write in so sull a manner as may satisfy those who know not so much of your affairs as I do. If any-thing unhappy should

Bo

73

51

1

VI

fi

n

ra

fa

le

le

S

th

th

W

Se

fir

th

fre

ev

590 ha

bla

On

ha

ha

bo

1.

me

has

ed

fall out from the violence of fuch fpirits as you have to deal with, your account of all things previous to it will be your best justification.

You fee what you draw upon yourfelf by excelling all your Sex. Every individual of it who knows you, or has heard of you, feems to think you answerable to her for your conduct in points so very delicate and concerning no milities surily a than them

Every eye, in hort, is upon you with the expectation of an example. I wish to heaven you were at liberty to pursue your own methods: All would. then, I dare fay, be easy, and honourably ended. But I dread your directors and directrelles; for your Mother, admirably well qualified as the is to lead, must submit to be led Your Sister and Brother will certainly put you out of your course.

But this is a point you will not permit me to expatiate upon: pardon me therefore, and I have done. -Yet, why should I say, Pardon me? When your Concerns are my Concerns? When your Honour is my Honour? When I love you, as never woman loved another? And when you have allowed of that Concern and of that Love; and have for years, which in persons so young may be called many, ranked in the first class of your friends,

Your ever grateful and affectionate, The of the trans of thow if the Anna Howe it to counties a man who is to trade into her viewountellies Will you oblige me with a copy of the Preamble to the clauses in your Grandfather's Will in your favour; and allow me to fend it to my Aunt Harman?-She is very desirous to see it. Yet your character has so charmed her, that, tho' a stranger to you personally, she assents to the preference given you in that Will, before the knows the Testator's reasons for giving you that preference on section stort waster services a same bluerft vonding grad-yes H . as I as LE T-

are this word in E. T. T. E. R. II. we have not yet

Miss CLARISSA HARLOWE, To Miss Howe.

vin delaw neveral and he Harlowe-Place, Jan. 13.

HOW you oppres me, my dearest friend, with your politeness! I cannot doubt your fincerity; but you should take care, that you give me not reason from your kind partiality to call in question your judgment. You do not diftinguish that I take many admirable hints from you, and have the art to pass them upon you for my own : For in all you do, in all you fay, nay, in your very looks (so animated !) you give lessons to one who loves you and observes you as I love and observe you, without knowing that you do-So, pray, my dear, be more sparing of your praise for the future, left after this confession we should suspect that you fecretly intend to praise yourfelf, while you would be thought only to commend another.

Our Family has indeed been strangely discomposed, Discomposed! -It has been in tumults, ever fince the unhappy transaction; and I have borne all the blame; yet should have had too much concern from myself, had I been more justly spared by every one elfe.

e:

0 80

4:1

8 43

y

SEE!

HILL !

t

d.

rv

00

65

all

co.

Ir S

no

at.

h

n

10

111

COL

le

in

y

t.

t, to

re

uc

1150 lie.

For, whether it be owing to a faulty impatience, having been too indulgently treated to be enured to blame, or to the regret I have to hear those censured on my account whom it is my duty to vindicate; I have fometimes wished, that it had pleased God to have taken me in my last fever, when I had everybody's love and good opinion; but oftener that I had never been diftinguished by my Grandfather as I was: Since that distinction has estranged from me my Brother's and Sifter's affections; at leaft, has raised a jealousy with regard to the apprehended favour of my two Uncles, that now-and-then overshadows their Love.

B3 My

I

My Brother being happily recovered of his fever, and his wound in a hopeful way, altho' he has not yet ventured abroad, I will be as particular as you defire in the little history you demand of me. But Heaven forbid that any-thing should ever happen which may require it to be produced for the purpose you mention!

I will begin, as you command, with Mr. Lovelace's address to my Sister; and be as brief as possible. I will recite facts only; and leave you to judge of the truth of the report raised that the younger

Sifter has robbed the elder. .... nov mon ative

It was in pursuance of a conference between Lord M. and my Uncle Antony, that Mr. Lovelace [my Father and Mother not forbidding] paid his respects to my Sister Arabella. My Brother was then in Scotland, busying himself in viewing the condition of the considerable Estate which was lest him there by his generous Godmother, together with one as considerable in Yorkshire. I was also absent at my Dairy-house, as it is called (a), busied in the accounts relating to the Estate which my Grandfather had the goodness to device to me; and which once a year was lest to my inspection, althout I have given the whole into my Bather's power.

My Sifter made me a visit there the day after Mr. Lovelace had been introduced; and seemed highly pleased with the gentleman. His birth, his fortune in possession, a clear 2000 st. a year, as Lord M. had assured my Uncle; presumptive heir to that Nobleman's large Estate: His great expectations from Lady Sarah Sadleir and Lady Betty Lawrence; who with his Uncle interested themselves very warmly (he being the last of his line) to see him married.

(a) Her Grandfather, in order to invite her to him as often as her other friends would spare her, indulged her in creding and fitting up a Dairy-house in her own taste. When sinished, it was so much admited for its elegant simplicity and convenience, that the whose Scat (before, of old time, from its situation, called The Grove) was generally known by the name of The Dairy bouse. Her Grandfather in particular was fond of having it so called.

I.

er,

vet

lire

en

ay

n!

ve-

ffi-

lge

ger

ord

ny

ets in on

re

45

ny

C-

er

ce

en

TA.

er

ed

is rd

at

75

,

1-

d.

er

up

ďat

e-

in

0

So handsome a man!—O her beloved Clary!" (for then she was ready to love me dearly, from the overflowings of her good humour on his account!) He was but too handsome a man for her!—Were she but as amiable as Somebody, there would be a probability of holding his affections !- For he was wild, the heard; very wild, very gay; loved intrigue-But he was young; a man of sense: Would ' fee his error, could she but have patience with hisfaults, if his faults were not cured by Marriage."

Thus the ran on; and then wanted me ' to fee the charming man,' as the called him. - Again concerned, 'that she was not manufactured, 'that she was not manufactured, 'With, 'A fad thing, that the man should the woman in that particuthat the was not handsome enough lar!'-But then, stepping to the glass, she complimented herself, 'That she was very well: That there were many women deemed passable who were inferior to herfelf: That she was always thought comely; and Comeliness, let her tell me, having onot so much to lose as Beauty had, would hold, when that would evaporate or fly off:-Nay, for ' that matter' [and again the turned to the glass] her features were not irregular; her eyes not at all amis.' And I remember they were more than usually brilliant at that time. - Nothing, in short, to be found fault with, tho' nothing very engaging the doubted-Was there, Clary."

Excuse me, my dear, I never was thus particular before; no, not to you. Nor would I now have written thus freely of a Sister, but that she makes a merit to my Brother of disowning that the ever liked him; as I shall mention hereafter: And then you will always have me give you minute descriptions, nor fuffer me to pass by the air and manner in which things are spoken that are to be taken notice of; rightly observing, that air and manner often express more than the accompanying words.

B. 4

I con-

-1135

t

1

1:

b

6

.

61

6:

61

52

4

10

6

13

6

411

I congratulated her upon her prospects. She received my compliments with a great deal of self-complacency. b am

She liked the gentleman still more at his next visit; and yet he made no particular address to her, althound an opportunity was given him for it. This was wondered at, as my Uncle had introduced him into our family declaredly as a visiter to my Sister. But as we are ever ready to make excuses when in good humour with ourselves for the perhaps not unwilful slights of those whose approbation we wish to engage; so my Sister sound out a reason much to Mr. Lovelace's advantage for his not improving the opportunity that was given him.—It was bashfulness, truly, in him. [Bashfulness in Mr. Lovelace, my dear!]—Indeed, gay and lively as he is, he has not the Look of an impudent man. But I fancy, it is many, many years ago since he was bashful.

Thus, however, cou'd my Sister make it out-"Upon her word, the believed Mr. Lovelace deserved not the bad character he had as to women. - He was really, to ber thinking, a modest man. He would have spoken out, she believed; but once or twice as he feemed to intend to do so, he was under fo agreeable a confusion! Such a profound respect he feemed to flew her! A perfect reverence, she thought: She loved dearly that a man in courthip should shew a reverence to his mistres'-So indeed we all do, I believe: And with reason; fince, if I may judge from what I have feen in many families, there is little enough of it shewn afterwards .- And she told my Aunt Hervey, that she would be a little less upon the reserve next time he came: 5 She was not one of those Flirts, not the, who would give pain to a person that deserved to be well treated; and the more pain for the greats ness of his value for her.'- I wish she had not Somebody whom I love in her eye.

the accompanying true

I.

re-

If-

t;

10'

n-

ur

as

uful

in-

p-ís, ny

is

He

He

der ect

she

rt-

-So

n;

ny

er-

the

: he

he,

to

at-

not

In

In his third visit, Bella governed herself by this kind and considerate principle: So that, according to her own account of the matter, the man might have spoken out.—But he was still bashful: He was not able to overcome this unseasonable reverence. So this visit went off as the former.

But now the began to be diffatisfied with him. She compared his general character with This his particular behaviour to her; and having never been courted before, owned herfelf puzzled how to deal with fo odd a Lover. What did the man mean, the wondered? Had not her Uncle brought him declaredly as a Suiter to her?—It could not be bashfulness (now the thought of it) fince he might have opened his mind to her Uncle; if he wanted courage to speak directly to her. - Not that the cared much for the man neither: But it was right, furely, that a woman 6 (hould be put out of doubt early as to a man's intentions in such a case as This, from his own mouth. But, truly, the had begun to think, that he was more folicitous to cultivate her Mamma's good opinion, than hers !- Every body, the owned, admired her Mother's conversation; but he was mistaken if he thought respect to her Mother only would do with ber. And then, for his own fake, furely he hould put it into her power to be complaifant to him, if he gave her reason to approve of him, This distint behaviour, she must take upon her to fay, was the more extraordinary, as he continued his vifits, and declared himself extremely defirous to cultivate a friendship with the whole Family; and as he could have no doubt about her finfe, if the might take upon her to join her own with the general opinion; he having taken great notice of, and admired many of her good things as they fell from her lips. Referves were painful, the must needs fay, to open and free spirits, like hers : And yet the must tell my Aunt' (to whom all this was directed) s that the should never forget what she owed to her Sex, and to herfelf, were Mr. Love-Lace as unexceptionable in his morals as in his figure, and were he to urge his fuir ever fo warmly."

I was not of her council, I was still absent. And it was agreed upon between my Aunt Hervey and her, that the was to be quite folemn and thy in his next vifit, if there were not a peculiarity in his ad-

STEP STILL

and or supiverist to beer But my Sifter it feems had not confidered the marter well. This was not the way, as it proved, to be taken, for matters of mere omission, with a man of Mr. Lovelace's penetration. Nor with any man; fince if love has not taken root deep enough to cause it to shoot out into declaration, if an opportunity be fairly given for it, there is little room to expect, that the blighting winds of anger or resentment will bring Then my poor Sifter is not naturally. good-humoured. This is too well-known a truth for me to endeavour to conceal it, especially from. She must therefore, I doubt, have appeared: to great diladvantages when the aimed to be worfe-

How they managed it in their next conversation I know not. One would be tempted to think by the iffue, that Mr. Lovelace was ungenerous enough to feek the occasion given (e), and to improve it. Yet he thought fit to put the question too :- But, the fays, it was not till, by some means or other the knew. not how) he had wrought her up to fuch a pitch of: displeasure with him, that it was impossible for her to. recover herself at the instant. Nevertheless he reurged his question, as expecting a definitive answer; without waiting for the return of her temper, or endeavouring to mollify her; fo that the was under a necessity of persisting in her denial: Yet gave him reason

L

re

th

he

CO

th

6.

6fer

te

VO

18 th

eit

ca

fre

di

th

100

ve

18

6.

(a) See Mr. Lovelice's Letter, M? xxxi, in which he briefly accounts for his conduct in this affair, ) Tout A you that fluor oull tog reason to think she did not dislike his address, only the manner of it; his court being rather made to her Mother than to herself, as if he was sure of her confent at any time.

. I.

The

VC+

fi-

Ind

and

his ad-

at-

of

in;

be

hat

ing.

uth:

om:

red:

fea.

.

n I

the

to:

he ys.

of:

re-

er.

n-n

a.

im

unts

fon

A good encouraging denial, I must own:—As was the rest of her plea; to wit, A disinclination to change her State.—Exceedingly happy as she was: She never could be happier! And such-like confenting negatives, as I may call them, and yet not intend a resection upon my Sister: For what can any young creature in the like circumstances say, when she is not sure but a too ready consent may subject her to the slights of a Sex that generally values a blessing either more or less as it is obtained with difficulty or ease? Miss Biddulph's answer to a copy of verses from a gentleman, reproaching our Sex as acting in disguise, is not a bad one, altho' you perhaps may think it too acknowledging for the semale character.

Ungen'rous Sex!—To scorn us, if we're kind;
And yet upbraid us, if we seem severe!
Do You, t'encourage us to tell our mind, Your selves put off disguise, and be sincere.
You talk of Coquetry!—Your own false bearts Compel our Sex to aid dissembling parts.

Here I am obliged to lay down my pen. I will foon refume it.

LETTER III.

Miss CLARISSA HARLOWE, To Miss Howe.

Jan. 13, 14.

A ND thus, as Mr. Lovelace thought fit to take it, had he his answer from my Sister. It was with very great regret, as he pretended [I doubt the man is an hypocrite, my dear] that he acquiesced in it. So much determinedness; such a noble firmness in my Sister; that there was no hope of prevailing upon B. 6.

E

h

i

Ь

n

fi

f

f:

h

f

u

f

her to alter sentiments she had adopted on full consideration. He sighed, as Bella told us, when he took his leave of her: Prosoundly sighed; grasped her hand, and kissed it with such an ardor—Withdrew with such an air of solemn respect—She had him then before her.—She could almost find in her heart, altho' he had vexed her, to pity him.' A good intentional preparative to Love, this pity; since, at the time, she little thought that he would not renew his offer.

He waited on my Mother after he had taken leave of Bella, and reported his ill success in so respectful a manner, as well with regard to my Sister, as to the whole Family, and with so much concern that he was not accepted as a relation to it, that it left upon them all (my Brother being then, as I have said, in Scotland) impressions in his favour, and a belief that this matter would certainly be brought on again. But Mr. Lovelace going up directly to town, where he stayed a whole fortnight, and meeting there with my Uncle Antony, to whom he regretted his Niece's cruel resolution not to change her State; it was seen that there was a total end of the affair.

My Sifter was not wanting to herfelf on this occasion. She made a virtue of necessity; and the man was quite another man with her. A vain creature! too well knowing his advantages: Yet those not what she had conceived them to be !- Cool and warm by fits and ftarts; an ague-like Lover. A · fleady man, a man of virtue, a man of morals, was worth a thousand of such gay flutterers. Her Sister Clary might think it worth her while perhaps to try to engage such a man: She had patience: She was mistress of persuasion; and indeed, to do the girl justice, had something of a person: But as for ber, the would not have a man of whose heart the could not be fure for one moment; no, not for the world: And most fincerdly glad was she that she had rejected him.' But But when Mr. Lovelace returned into the country, he thought fit to visit my Father and Mother; hoping, as he told them, that, however unhappy he had been in the rejection of the wished-for alliance; he might be allowed to keep up an acquaintance and friendship with a family which he should always respect. And then unhappily as I may say, was I at home and present.

It was immediately observed, that his attention was fixed on me. My Sister, as soon as he was gone, in a spirit of bravery, seemed desirous to promote his address, should it be tendered.

My Aunt Hervey was there; and was pleased to fay, We should make the finest couple in England—if my Sister had no objection.—No, indeed! with a haughty toss, was my Sister's reply—It would be strange if she had, after the denial she had given him upon full deliberation.

My Mother declared, That ber only dislike of his alliance with either Daughter, was on account of his reputed faulty morals.

My Uncle Harlowe, That his Daughter Clary, as he delighted to call me from childhood, would reform him if any woman in the world could.

My Uncle Antony gave his approbation in high terms: But referred, as my Aunt had done, to my Sifter.

. I.

on-

he

ped

th-

had

m.'

ty;

uld

ave ful

the

he

oon

in.

in.

ere

his

te;

ca-

nan re!

not

and

was fter

try

was girl

ber,

ould

the

the But She repeated her contempt of him; and declared, that were there not another Man in England, the would not have him. She was ready, on the contrary, the could affure them, to refign her pretentions under hand and feal, if Miss Clary were taken with his tinfel; and if every one else approved of his address to the girl.

My Father indeed, after a long filence, being urged hy my Uncle Antony to speak his mind, said, That he had a letter from his Son, on his hearing of Mr. Lovelace's visits to his Daughter Arabella; which he had

L

the

OU

fer

cre

ha

I,

bu

of 13 fre

ed

m

SoBu

no

fo

MA

pe -V

th

fo

50

5.

SE.

h

W

at

H

had not shewn to any-body but my Mother; that treaty being at an end when he received it; That in this Letter he expressed great dislike to an alliance: with Mr. Lovelace on the score of his Immoralities: That he knew indeed, there was an old grudge between them; but that, being defirous to prevent all occasions of difunion and animofity in his family, he would suspend the declaration of his own mind till his Son arrived, and till he had heard his further objections: That he was the more inclined to make his Son this compliment, as Mr. Lovelace's general character gave but too much ground for his Son's diflike of him; adding, That he had heard (So, he supposed, had every one) that he was a very extravagant man; that he had contracted debts in his. travels: And indeed, he was pleafed to fay, he had! the air of a fpendehrift.

These particulars I had partly from my Aunt Hervey, and partly from my Sister; for I was called out as soon as the subject was entered upon. When I returned, my Uncle Antony asked me, How I should like Mr. Lovelace? Every-body saw, he was pleased to say, that I had made a conquest.

I immediately answered, That I did not like him at all: He seemed to have too good an opinion both of his person and parts, to have any great regard to his Wife, let him marry whom he would.

My Sifter particularly was pleafed with this answer, and confirmed it to be just; with a compliment to my judgment-For it was hers.

CHE DIE

But the very next day Lord M. came to Harloweplace [I was then absent]; and in his Nephew's name made a proposal in form; declaring, That it was the ambition of all his family to be related to ours: And he hoped his Kinsman would not have such an answer on the part of the younger Sister, as he had on that of the elder.

In short, Mr. Lovelace's visits were admitted as those of a man who had not deserved disrespect from our Family; but as to his address to me, with a reservation, as above, on my Father's part, that he would determine nothing without his Son. My discretion as to the rest was confided in: For still I, had the same objections as to the man: nor would I, when we were better acquainted, hear any thing but general talk from him; giving him no opportunity of converling with me in private.

f.

at

in

ce:

S ::

e-

II.

ne:

11

0-

te-

al

's.

e:

14

is - id:

10:

---

1.

,

.

n'

1 .

0

3

t.

3

3.

s.

12

5

31

He bore this with a refignation little expected from his natural temper, which is generally reported to be quick and hafty; unused it seems from childhood to check or controul. A case too common in confiderable families where there is an only Son: And bis Mother never had any other child. But, as I have heretofore told you, I could perceive notwithstanding this refignation, that he had so good an opinion of himself, as not to doubt, that his perfon and accomplishments would infensibly engage. me: And could That be once done, he told my Aunt Hervey, he should hope, from so steady a temper, that his hold in my affections would be durable: While my Sifter accounted for his patience in another manner, which would perhaps have had more force if it had come from a person less prejudiced: 5 That the man was not fond of marrying at all: f. That he might perhaps have half-a-fcore mistreffes :: and that delay might be as convenient for his roofoing, as for my well acted indifference. - That was hervkindsexpression and sommund bus stand and

Whatever was his motive for a patience fo generally believed to be out of his usual character, and where the object of his address was supposed to be of fortune considerable enough to engage his warmest attention, he certainly escaped many mortifications by it.: For while my Father suspended his approbation till my Brother's arrival, Mr. Lovelace received from every one those civilities which were due to his birth:

And

L

th

ar

fu

00

01

1

fc

th

ar

fe

at

th

hi

pe

OI

VE

W

tu

20 ac

fee

th

m

fo

k

fa

ol

to

it

And altho' we heard from time to time reports to his disadvantage with regard to morals; yet could we not question him upon them without giving him greater advantages in his own opinion than the struction he was in with us would justify to prudence; since it was much more likely that his address would not be allowed of, than that it would.

And thus was he admitted to converse with our family almost upon his own terms; for while my friends saw nothing in his behaviour but what was extremely respectful, and observed in him no violent importunity, they seemed to have taken a great liking to his conversation: While I considered him only as a common guest when he came; and thought myself no more concerned in his visits, nor at his entrance and departure, than any other of the samily.

But this indifference on my fide was the means of procuring him one very great advantage; fince upon it was grounded that correspondence by Letters which succeeded;—and which, had it been to be begun when the samily animosity broke out, would never have been entered into on my part. The occasion was this:

My Uncle Hervey has a young gentleman entrusted to his care, whom he has thoughts of sending abroad a year or two hence, to make the Grand Tour, as it is called; and finding Mr. Lovelace could give a good account of every thing necessary for a young traveller to observe upon such an occasion, he desired him to write down a description of the Courts and Countries he had visited, and what was most worthy of curiosity in them.

He consented, on condition that I would direct his subjects, as he called it: And as every one had heard his manner of writing commended; and thought his narratives might be agreeable amusements in winter evenings; and that he could have no opportunity particularly to address me in them, since they were to be read in full assembly before they were given to the young gentleman, I made the less scruple to write, and to make observations, and put questions for our further information—Still the less perhaps as I love writing; and those who do, are fond, you know, of occasions to use the pen: And then, having every one's consent, and my Uncle Hervey's desire that I would write, I thought that if I had been the only scrupulous person, it would have shewn a particularity that a vain man might construe to his advantage; and which my Sister would not fail to animadvert upon.

the

You have seen some of these Letters; and have been pleased with his account of persons, places, and things; and we have both agreed, that he was no common obferver upon what he had feen.

a I.

his

we oft-

CE;

uld

nily

aw

ref-

ty,

on-

on

ore

de-

BH

of

OR

ch

ien

en

bq

n-

dnd ict.

ry

of

at

nis

rd

his

ter

Ir-

to

te

My Sifter herself allowed that the man had a tolerable knack of writing and describing: And my Father, who had been abroad in his youth, said, That his remarks were curious, and shewed him to be a person of reading, judgment, and taste.

Thus was a kind of correspondence begun between him and me, with general approbation; while every one wondered at, and was pleased with, his patient veneration of me; for so they called it. However, it was not doubted but he would soon be more importunate, since his visits were more frequent, and he acknowledged to my Aunt Hervey a passion for me, accompanied with an awe that he had never known before; to which he attributed what he called his but seeming acquiescence with my Father's pleasure, and the distance I kept him at. And yet, my dear, this may be his usual manner of behaviour to our Sex; for had not my Sister at first all his reverence?

Mean time, my Father, expecting his importunity, kept in readiness the reports he had heard in his disfavour, to charge them upon him then, as so many objections to address. And it was highly agreeable to me that he did so: It would have been strange if it were not; since the person who could reject Mr.

Wyerley's

L

fe

t

C

0

10

fe

fi

ti

W

C

V6

06

30 j

SV

10 o L

e

199 . 6

a

t

C

- 2

Wyerley's address for the sake of his free opinions, must have been inexcusable, had she not rejected another's for his freer practices.

But I should own, that in the Letters he sent me upon the general subject, he more than once inclosed a particular one, declaring his passionate regards for me, and complaining with fervour enough, of my referves: But of these I took not the least notice; for, as I had not written to him at all, but upon a subject so general, I thought it was but right to let what he wrote upon one so particular pass off as if I had never feen it; and the rather, as I was not then at liberty (from the approbation his Letters met with) to break off the correspondence, unless I had assigned the true reason for doing so. Besides, with all his respectful affiduities, it was easy to observe (if it had not been his general character) that his temper is naturally haughty and violent; and I had feen too much of that untractable spirit in my Brother to like it in one who hoped to be still more nearly related to me.

I had a little specimen of this temper of his upon the very occasion I have mentioned: For after he had sent me a third particular Letter with the general one, he asked me the next time he came to Harlowe-Place, if I had not received such a one from him?—I told him I should never answer one so sent; and that I had waited for such an occasion as he had now given me, to tell him so: I desired him therefore not to write again on the subject; assuring him, that if he did, I would return both, and never write another line to him.

You can't imagine how faucily the man look'd; as if, in thort, he was disappointed that he had not made a more sensible impression upon me: Nor, when he recollected himself (as he did immediately), what a visible struggle it cost him to change his haughty airs for more placid ones. But I took no notice of either; for I thought it best to convince him, by the cool-nions,

ected

it me

lofed

s for

y re-

for,

bject

at he never perty

reak

true

Etful

been rally

h of one

pon

he

ene-

lar-

rom e fo

n as

him

ring

ever

'd ;

not hen

hat

hty

e of

the

-loc

coolness and indifference with which I repulsed his forward hopes (at the same time intending to avoid the affectation of pride or vanity) that he was not confiderable enough in my eyes to make me take over-ready offence at what he faid, or at his haughty looks: In other words, that I had not value enough for him to treat him with peculiarity either by fmiles or frowns. Indeed he had cunning enough to give me, undefignedly, a piece of instruction which taught me this caution; for he had faid in conversation once, 'That if a man could not make a woman in courtship own herself pleased with him, it was as much and oftentimes more to his purpose to make her angry with him.

I must break off here. But will continue the subject the very first opportunity. Mean time, I am

Your most affectionate Friend and Servant,

CL. HARLOWE.

flut my Viologs amer Tea of Inche happy.

. yea'll lay, upon the whole,

Miss CLARISSA HARLOWF, To Miss Howe. from hating: And having lefs com-

CUCH, my dear, was the fituation Mr. Lovelace and I were in when my Brother arrived from

The moment Mr. Lovelace's visits were mentioned to him, he, without either hefitation or apology, expressed his disapprobation of them. He found great flaws in his character; and took the liberty to fay in fo many words, That he wondered how it came into the heads of his Uncles to encourage fuch a man for either of his Sifters: At the same time returning his thanks to my Father for declining his consent till be arrived, in such a manner, I thought, as a Superior would do, when he commended an Inferior for having well performed his duty in his absence.

He justified his avowed inveteracy by common fame,

LE

· V

6 h

6 h

6 b

Bro

joil

feld

hin

not not val

on

too

he

veh

bab

but fub

in

1 c

to fee

not

pre

as wal

fort

ver

aut

hou

per nag

one

1

fame, and by what he had known of him at College; declaring, That he had ever hated him; ever should hate him; and would never own him for a Brother, or me for a Sister, if I married him.

That early antipathy I have heard accounted for in this manner:

Mr. Lovelace was always noted for his vivacity and courage; and no less, it seems, for the swift and surprising progress he made in all parts of literature: For diligence in his studies in the hours of study, he had hardly his equal. This it seems was his general character at the University; and it gained him many friends among the more learned; while those who did not love him, feared him, by reason of the offence his vivacity made him too ready to give, and of the courage he shewed in supporting the offence when given; which procused him as many followers as he pleased among the mischievous fort.—No very amiable character, you'll say, upon the whole.

But my Brother's temper was not more happy. His native haughtiness could not bear a superiority so visible; and whom we sear more than love, we are, not far from hating: And having less command of his passions than the other, he was evermore the subject of his perhaps indecent ridicule; So that they never met without quarrelling: And every-body, either from love or sear, siding with his antagonist, he had a most uneasy time of it while both continued in the same College.—It was the less wonder therefore that a young man who is not noted for the gentleness of his temper, should resume an antipathy early begun, and so deeply rooted.

He found my Sister, who waited but for the occafion, ready to join him in his refertments against the man he hated. She utterly disclaimed all manner of regard for him: 'Never liked him at all:— 'His Estate was certainly much incumbered: It was 'impossible it should be otherwise; so entirely de-

« voted

. 1,

ol-

m;

bim

for

ity

ind

e:

he

ral

ny

rho

nce

the

ıen

as

ery

py.

ity

WC

m-

So.

nd

ith

nile

the

not re-

ed.

ca-

inft

an-

-

was

de-

ted

Setmon!

voted as he was to his pleasures. He kept no house; had no equipage: Nobody pretended that he wanted pride: The reason therefore was easy to be guessed at. And then did she boast of, and my Brother praised her for, refusing him: And both joined on all occasions to depreciate him, and not seldom made the occasions; their displeasure against him causing every subject to run into this, if it began not with it.

I was not folicitous to vindicate him when I was not joined in their reflections. I told them, I did not value him enough to make a difference in the family on his account: And as he was supposed to have given too much cause for their ill opinion of him, I thought he ought to take the consequence of his own faults.

Now and then indeed, when I observed that their vehemence carried them beyond all bounds of probability in their charges against him, I thought it but justice to put in a word for him. But this only subjected me to reproach, as having a prepossession in his favour which I would not own.—So that when I could not change the subject, I used to retire either to my mufic, or to my closet.

Their behaviour to him when they could not help feeing him, was very cold and disobliging; but as yet not directly affrontive. For they were in hopes of prevailing upon my Father to forbid his visits. But, as there was nothing in his behaviour, that might warrant such a treatment of a man of his birth and fortune, they succeeded not: And then they were very earnest with me to forbid them. I asked, What authority I had to take such a step in my Father's house; and when my behaviour to him was so distant, that he seemed to be as much the guest of any other person of the samily, themselves excepted, as mine?

—In revenge, they told me, That it was cunning management between us; and that we both understood one another better than we pretended to do. And

LE

fp

u af

V

d

to

e

C m th

tr

h

g

W

th

If

c k

e th

n

h

m

W

· li

W

H

W

a u h 2 C

Au

abl

To

ver a w

at last they gave such a loose to their passions, all of a fudden (a) as I may fay, that instead of withdrawing, as they used to do when he came, they threw themselves in his way purposely to affront him.

Mr. Lovelace, you may believe, very ill brooked this: But nevertheless contented himself to complain of it to me: In high terms however, telling me, that but for my fake my Brother's treatment of him was not to be borne.

I was forry for the merit this gave him in his own opinion with me: And the more, as some of the affronts he received were too flagrant to be excused; But I told him, That I was determined not to fall out with my Brother, if I could help it, whatever faults he had: And, fince they could not fee one another with temper, should be glad that he would not throw himself in my Brother's way; and Lwas fure my Brother would not feek bim.

He was very much nettled at this answer: But faid, He must bear his affronts if I would have it fo. He had been accused himself of violence in his temper; but he hoped to shew on this occasion that he had a command of his passions which few young men, so highly provoked, would be able to shew; and doubted not but it would be attributed to a proper motive by a person of my generosity and penetration.

My Brother had just before, with the approbation of my Uncles, employed a person related to a discharged Bailist or Steward of Lord M. who had had the management of some part of Mr. Lovelace's affairs (from which he was also dismissed by him) to enquire into his debts, after his companions, into his amours, and the like.

My Aunt Hervey, in confidence, gave me the following particulars of what the man faid of him.

"That he was a generous Landlord: That he fpared

(a) The reason of this their more-openly shewn animosity is given in Letter xule of pabrieten aw audt 121190

I.

of

Wew

ed

m-

ng

ent

wn

af-

d:

all

ver

ne

ald

yas

But

fo.

m-

he

en,

ind

per

n.

ion

lif-

nad

ve-

by

ns,

ol-

he

iven

red

spared nothing for folid and lasting improvements upon his Estate; and that he looked into his own affairs, and understood them: That he had been very expensive when abroad; and contracted a large debt (for he made no secret of his affairs) ; yet chose to limit himself to an annual sum, and to decline equipage, in order to avoid being obliged to his Uncle and Aunts; from whom he might have what money he pleased; but that he was very jealous of their controul; had often quarrels with them; and treated them fo freely, that they were all afraid of However, that his Estate was never mortgaged, as my Brother had heard it was; his credit was always high; and the man believed, he was by this time near upon, if not quite, clear of the world. " He was a fad gentleman, he faid, as to women:-If his tenants had pretty daughters, they chose to keep them out of his fight. He believed he kept no particular mistress; for he had heard newelty, that was the man's word, was every thing with him. But for his Uncle's and Aunt's teizings, the man fansied he would not think of marriage: He was never known to be disguised with liquor; but was a great plotter, and a greater writer: That he lived a wild life in town, by what he had heard: Had Six or Seven companions as bad as himfelf; whom now-and-then he brought down with him; and the country was always glad when they went up again. He would have it, that altho' paffionate, he was good-humour'd; lov'd as well to take a jest as to give one; and would railly himself upon occafion the freest of any man he ever knew.'

This was his character from an enemy; for, as my Aunt observed, every thing the man said commendably of him came grudgingly, with a Must needs say—To do him justice, &c. while the contrary was delivered with a free good-will. And this character, as a worse was expected, tho' This was bad enough, not

LI

fay

qu

wl

ho

ple

pa int

my

fai

hir

COL

Ar

giv

pre

for hav

clir

wa

offe

the

an

Mr.

the

nob

favo

and

posi

Iha

dref

to S

answering the end of enquiring after it, my Brother and Sister were more apprehensive than before, that his address would be encouraged, since the worst part of it was known, or supposed, when he was first introduced to my Sifter.

But, with regard to myself, I must observe in his disfavour, that notwithstanding the merit he wanted to make with me for his patience upon my Brother's ill-treatment of him, I owed him no compliments for trying to conciliate with him. Not that I believe it would have fignified any thing if he had made ever fuch court either to him or to my Sister: Yet one might have expected from a man of his politeness, and from his pretenfions, you know, that he would have been willing to try. Instead of which, he shewed fuch a contempt both of my Brother and Sifter, especially my Brother, as was conftrued into a defiance of them. And for me to have hinted at an alteration in his behaviour to my Brother, was an advantage I knew he would have been proud of; and which therefore I had no mind to give him. But I doubted not that having so very little encouragement from anybody, his pride would foon take fire, and he would of himself discontinue his visits, or go to town; where, till he came acquainted with our family, he used chiefly to reside: And in this latter case he had no reason to expect, that I would receive, much less answer, his Letters; the occasion which had led me to receive any of his being by this time over.

But my Brother's antipathy would not permit him to wait for such an event; and after several excesses, which Mr. Lovelace still returned with contempt, and a haughtiness too much like that of the aggressor, my Brother took upon himself to fill up the door-way once when he came, as if to oppose his entrance: And upon his asking for me, demanded, What his business was with his Sifter?

The other, with a challenging air, as my Brother favs, fays, told him, He would answer a Gentleman any question; but he wished that Mr. James Harlowe, who had of late given himself high airs, would remember that he was not now at College.

I.

er

at

ft

ft

is

ed

's

or

it

er

ne

S, ld.

ed

e-

ce

on

I

e-ot

y-

ld

1;

he ad

els

ne

m es,

ot,

or,

ay

nd

ess

er

ys,

Just then the good Dr. Lewen, who frequently honours me with a visit of Conversation, as he is pleased to call it, and had parted with me in my own parlour, came to the door; and hearing the words, interposed; both having their hands upon their swords; And telling Mr. Lovelace where I was, he burft by my Brother, to come to me; leaving him chafing, he faid, like a hunted boar at bay.

This alarmed us all. My father was pleafed to hint to Mr. Lovelace, that he wished he would difcontinue his visits, for the peace-sake of the family: And I, by his command, spoke a great deal plainer.

But Mr. Lovelace is a man not eafily brought to give up his purpose, especially in a point wherein he pretends his heart is fo much engaged: And no abfolute prohibition having been given, things went on for a little while as before: For I faw plainly, that to have denied myself to his visits (which however I declined receiving as often as I could) was to bring forward some desperate issue between the two; since the offence so readily given on one side was brooked by the other only out of confideration to me.

And thus did my Brother's rashness lay me under an obligation where I would least have owed it.

The intermediate proposals of Mr. Symmes and Mr. Mullins, both (in turn) encouraged by my Brother, induced him to be more patient for a while, as nobody thought me over-forward in Mr. Lovelace's favour; for he hoped that he should engage my Father and Uncles to approve of the one or the other in oppolition to the man he hated. But when he found that I had interest enough to disengage myself from the addresses of those gentlemen, as I had (before he went to Scotland, and before Mr. Lovelace visited here) of VOL. I. C Mr.

L

f

m ir

fe

C

ti

th

iń

(1

bi

CO

an

go

re

hi

de

m

th

Lo

de

mi

WI

he

ex

tha

wh

a f

tha

opp

Mr. Wyerley's, he then kept no measures: And first fet himself to upbraid me for a supposed prepossession, which he treated as if it were criminal; and then to insult Mr. Lovelace in person, at Mr. Edward Symmes's, the Brother of the other Symmes, two miles off; and no good Dr. Lewen being there to interpose, the unhappy Rencounter followed. My Brother was disarmed, as you have heard; and on being brought home, and giving us ground to suppose he was much worse hurt than he really was, and a sever ensuing, every one slamed out; and all was laid at my door.

Mr. Lovelace for three days together fent twice each day to enquire after my Brother's health; and altho' he received rude and even shocking returns, he thought fit on the fourth day to make in person the same enquiries; and received still greater incivilities from my two Uncles, who happened to be both there. My Father also was held by force from going to him with his sword in his band, altho' he had the gout upon him. hal

I fainted away with terror, seeing every one so violent, and hearing Mr. Lovelace swear that he would lnot depart till he had made my Uncles ask his pardon for the indignities he had received at their hands; a door being held fast locked between him and them. My Mother all the time was praying and struggling to with-hold my Father in the Great Parlour. Mean while my Sister, who had treated Mr. Lovelace with virulence, came in to me, and insulted me as fast as I recovered. But when Mr. Lovelace was told how ill I was, he departed; nevertheless vowing revenge.

He was ever a favourite with our domestics. His bounty to them, and having always something facetious to say to each, had made them all of his party: And on this occasion they privately blamed every-body else, and reported his calm and gentlemanly behaviour (till the provocations given him ran very high) in such favour-

. 1.

first

ion,

n to vard

two

in-3roeing

e he ever

d at wice

and

, he

the

ities

ere.

him

gout

VIO-

ould

rdon

: a hem.

gling

1ean

with

as I

w ill

His

face-

rty:

body

viout

fuch yourfavourable terms, that those reports, and my apprehensions of the consequence of this treatment, induced me to read a Letter he sent me that night; and, it being written in the most respectful terms (offering to submit the whole to my decision, and to govern himself entirely by my will) to answer it some days after.

To this unhappy necessity was owing our renewed correspondence, as I may call it: Yet I did not write till I had informed myself from Mr. Symmes's Brother, that he was really insulted into the act of drawing his sword by my Brother's repeatedly threatening (upon his excusing himself out of regard to me) to brand me if he did not; and, by all the enquiry I could make, that he was again the sufferer from my Uncles in a more violent manner than I have related.

The same circumstances were related to my Father and other relations by Mr. Symmes; but they had gone too far in making themselves parties to the quarrel either to retract or forgive; and I was forbidden to correspond with him, or to be seen a moment in his company.

One thing however I can fay, but that in confidence, because my Mother commanded me not to mention it:—That, expressing her apprehension of the consequences of the indignities offered to Mr. Lovelace, she told me, She would leave it to my prudence to do all I could to prevent the impending mischief on one side.

I am obliged to break off. But I believe I have written enough to answer very fully all that you have required of me. It is not for a child to seek to clear her own character, or to justify her actions, at the expence of the most revered ones: Yet, as I know that the account of all those further proceedings by which I may be affected, will be interesting to so dear a friend (who will communicate to others no more than what is fitting) I will continue to write, as I have opportunity, as minutely as we are used to write to

L

21

fe

T

to

de

fr

di

ve

pl

at

'n

hi

po

ch

A

du

m

an

·G

an

ON

viv

101

G

ftr

no

pro

Indeed I have no delight, as I have often each other. told you, equal to that which I take in conversing with you-By Letter, when I cannot in Perfon.

Mean time I cannot help faying, that I am exceedingly concerned to find, that I am become so much the public talk as you tell me I am. Your kind, your precautionary regard for my fame, and the opportunity you have given me to tell my own Story previous to any new accident (which Heaven avert!) is fo like the warm friend I have ever found in my dear Miss Howe, that, with redoubled obligation, you bind me to be

Your ever grateful and affectionate,

CLARISSA HARLOWE.

vincing receifful aids misen es Copy of the requested PREAMBLE to the clauses in her Grandfather's Will: Inclosed in the preceding Letter.

A S the particular Estate I have mentioned and defcribed above, is principally of my own raising: As my three Sons have been uncommonly prosperous; and are very rich: The eldest by means of the unexpected benefits he reaps from his new-found mines: The fecond, by what has, as unexpectedly, fallen in to him on the deaths of several relations of his present wife, the worthy daughter by both fides of very honourable families; over and above the very large portion which he received with her in marriage: My Son Antony by his East-India traffick, and successful voyages: As furthermore my Grandson James will be fufficiently provided for by his Grandmother Lovell's kindness to him; who, having no near relations, hath affured me, that she hath, as well by Deed of Gift as by Will, left him both her Scotish and English Estates: For never was there a family more prosperous in all its branches, bleffed be God therefore: And as my faid Son James will very probably make it up to my Grand-daughter Arabella; to whom I intend no difrespect; nor have reason; for she is a very hopeful and

and dutiful child: And as my Sons, John and Antony, feem not inclined to a married life; so that my Son Tames is the only one who has children, or is likely to have any-For all these reasons; and because my dearest and beloved Grand-daughter Clarissa hath been from her infancy a matchless young creature in her duty to me, and admired by all who knew her, as a very extraordinary child; I must therefore take the pleasure of considering her as my own peculiar child; and this without intending offence; and I hope it will not he taken as any, fince my Son James can bestow his favours accordingly, and in greater proportion, upon his Son James, and upon his Daughter Arabella. -Thele, I fay, are the reasons which move me to dispose of the above described Estate in the precious child's favour; who is the delight of my Old age: And, I verily think, has contributed, by her amiable duty and kind and tender regards, to prolong my life.

Wherefore it is my express Will and Commandment, and I enjoin my said three Sons, John, James, and Antony, and my Grandson James, and my Grand-daughter Arabella, as they value my Blessing, and will regard my Memory, and would wish their own last Wills and Desires to be fulfilled by their Survivor's, that they will not impugn or contest the following bequests and devises in savour of my said Grand-daughter Clarissa, altho' they should not be strictly conformable to Law or to the forms thereof; nor suffer them to be controverted or disputed on any pretence whatfoever.

And in this confidence, &c. &c. &c.

LETTER V.

Miss CLARISSA HARLOWE, To Miss Howe.

7an. 20.

I HAVE been hindered from profecuting my intention. Neither nights nor mornings have been C ?

I.

LET. 5.

ng

ch our tu-

us ike

liss me

1

NE.

deng: us;

exes: n in lent

hooor-Son

oy-

ell's

ft as

all

my dif-

peful and

L

25 fe

fo

th

th

fo

lil

fit

fa

th

. 1

6 1

FIC

pe

pe

CO

G rit

th

no

in 201

to

of

for

ra

an

tu

th

COL

as

ga ge

my

be my own. My Mother has been very ill; and would have no other nurse but me. I have not stirred from her bedside (for she kept her bed); and two nights I had the honour of fharing it with her.

Her disorder was a very violent Colic. tentions of these fierce, these masculine spirits, and the apprehension of mischiefs that may arise from the increasing animosity which all here have against Mr. Lovelace, and his too well-known refenting and intrepid character, the cannot bear. Then the foundations laid, as she dreads, for jealoufy and heart-burnings in her own family, late so happy and so united, afflict exceedingly a gentle and fenfible mind, which has from the beginning, on all occasions, facrificed its own inward fatisfaction to outward peace. My Brother and Sifter, who used very often to jar, are now so entirely one, and are so much together (caballing was the word that dropped from my Mother's lips, as if at unawares) that she is very fearful of the consequences that may follow; -to my prejudice, perhaps, is her kind concern; fince the fees that they behave to me every hour with more and more shyness and reserve: Yet, would she but exert that authority which the fuperiority of her fine talents gives her, all these family-feuds might perhaps be extinguished in their butyet beginnings; especially as the may be assured that all fitting concessions shall be made by me, not only as my Brother and Sifter are my Elders, but for the fake of fo excellent and fo indulgent a Mother.

For if I may fay to you, my dear, what I would not to any other person living, it is my opinion, that had she been of a temper that would have borne less, she would have had ten times less to bear than she has had. No commendation, you'll say, of the generosity of those spirits which can turn to its own disquiet fo much condescending goodness.

Upon my word I am sometimes tempted to think that we may make the world allow for and respect us as we please, if we can but be sturdy in our wills, and set out accordingly. It is but being the less beloved for it, that's all: And if we have power to oblige those we have to do with, it will not appear to us that we are. Our flatterers will tell us any thing sooner than our faults, or what they know we do not like to hear.

25

Were there not truth in this observation, is it posfible that my Brother and Sister could make their very failings, their vehemences, of fuch importance to all the family? 'How will my Son, how will my Ne-' phew, take this or that measure? What will be say to it? Let us consult bim about it; are references always previous to every refolution taken by his superiors, whose will ought to be his. Well may he expect to be treated with this deference by every other person, when my Father himself, generally so absolute, constantly pays it to him; and the more fince his Godmother's bounty has given independence to a spirit that was before under too little restraint.—But whither may these reflections lead me!—I know you do not love any of us but my Mother and me; and, being above all difguifes, make me sensible that you do' not oftener than I wish .- Ought I then to add force to your dislikes of those whom I wish you to like? of my father especially; for he, alas! has some excuse for his impatience of contradiction. He is not naturally an ill-temper'd man; and in his person and air, and in his conversation too, when not under the torture of a gouty paroxysm, every-body distinguishes the gentleman born and educated.

Our Sex perhaps must expect to bear a little—uncourtlines shall I call it?—from the Husband, whom as the Lover they let know the preference their hearts gave him to all other men.—Say what they will of generosity being a manly virtue; but upon my word, my dear, I have ever yet observed, that it is not to be met with in that Sex one time in ten that it is to be found

C 4

us as

L. J.

blud

om

ts I

on-

and

the

Mr.

tre-

ons

sin

ex-

om

in-

and rely ord

un-

ces

her

me

ve:

the

fa-

ut-

hat

nly

the

uld

hat

ess,

The

ne-

dif-

33

20

yo

en

cei

if

ha

go

Le

cli

the

the

nis

me

the

Sai

wa

Wil

Au

we

tur

to

Ob

he

be nei

ed,

reje

has Th

hin

ten

found in ours.—But my Father was foured by the cruel distemper I have named; which seised him all at once in the very prime of life, in so violent a manner as to take from the most active of minds, as his was, all power of activity, and that in all appearance for life.—It imprisoned, as I may say, his lively spirits in himself, and turned the edge of them against his own peace; his extraordinary prosperity adding to his impatiency. Those, I believe, who want the sewest earthly blessings, most regret that they want any.

But my Brother! what excuse can be made for his haughty and morose temper? He is really, my dear, I am forry to have occasion to say it, an ill-temper'd young man; and treats my Mother sometimes -Indeed he is not dutiful .- But, possessing every-thing, he has the vice of age mingled with the ambition of youth, and enjoys nothing-but his own haughtiness and ill-temper, I was going to fay .- Yet again am I adding force to your diflikes of some of us .- Once my dear, it was perhaps in your power to have moulded him as you pleased .- Could you have been my Sifter! Then had I had a Friend in a Sifter .-But no wonder that he does not love you now; who could nip in the bud, and that with a disdain, let me fay, too much of kin to his haughtiness, a passion that would not have wanted a fervor worthy of the object; and which possibly would have made him worthy.

But no more of this. I will profecute my former intention in my next; which I will fit down to as foon as breakfast is over; dispatching this by the messenger whom you have so kindly sent to enquire after us on my filence. Mean time, I am,

Your most affectionate and obliged

Friend and Servant,

515CL $035, 3400

CL. HARLOWE.

LET.

. I.

the

all

ans his nce

rits

his

his

veft

his ear,

er'd

In-

ng,

1 of ness

m I

nce

ave een

-

vho

me

hat

a;

mer

oon

ger

on

LETTERVI.

Miss CLARISSA HARLOWE, To Miss Howe.

Harlowe-Place, Jan. 20.

WILL now refume my narrative of proceedings here.—My Brother being in a good way, altho' you may be fure that his refentments are rather heightened than abated by the galling difgrace he has received, my friends (my Father and Uncles, however, if not my Brother and Sifter) begin to think that I have been treated unkindly. My Mother has been fo good as to tell me this fince I fent away my laft.

Nevertheless I believe they all think that I receive Letters from Mr. Lovelace. But Lord M. being inclined rather to support than to blame his Nephew. they feem to be so much afraid of Mr. Lovelace, that they do not put it to me whether I do or not; conniving on the contrary, as it should feem, at the only method left to allay the vehemence of a spirit which they have so much provoked: For he still infists upon Satisfaction from my Uncles; and this possibly (for he wants not Art) as the best way to be introduced again with some Advantage into our family. And indeed my Aunt Hervey has put it to my Mother, whether it were not best to prevail upon my Brother, to take a turn to his Yorkshire Estate (which he was intending to do before) and to flay there till all is blown over.

But this is very far from being his intention: For he has already began to hint again, that he shall never: be easy or fatisfied till I am married; and, finding neither Mr. Symmes nor Mr. Mullins will be accepted, has proposed Mr. Wyerley once more, on the score of his great passion for me. This I have again rejected; and but yesterday he mentioned one who has applied to him by Letter, making high offers. This is Mr. Solmes; Rich Solmes you know they call him. But this application has not met with the attention of one fingle foul.

L

Gr

Au

cet

fol

mo

Ur

tha

are

tha

at

is c

(bu

del

ral

kn

my felf

let

for

-

Gr

a f gra

1

5

H

oft

thi

the lace

hin

-1

1

Bro

If none of his schemes of getting me married take effect, he has thoughts, I am told, of proposing to me to go to Scotland, that, as the compliment is, I may put his house there in such order as our own is in. But this my Mother intends to oppose for her own sake; because, having relieved her, as she is pleased to say, of the houshold cares (for which my Sister, you know, has no turn) they must again devolve upon her if I go. And if she did not oppose it, I should; for, believe, me, I have no mind to be his housekeeper; and I am sure, were I to go with him, I should be treated rather as a Servant than a Sister: —Perhaps, not the better because I am his Sister. And if Mr. Lovelace should follow me, things might be worse than they are now.

But I have befought my Mother, who is apprehenfive of Mr. Lovelace's vifits, and for fear of whom my Uncles never stir out without arms and armed servants (my Brother also being near well enough to go abroad) to procure me permission to be your guest for a fortnight, or so.—Will your Mother, think you, my dear, give me leave?

I dare not ask to go to my dairy-house, as my good Grandfather would call it: For I am now asraid of being thought to have a wish to enjoy that independence to which his Will has entitled me: And as matters are situated, such a wish would be imputed to my regard to the man to whom they have now so great an antipathy. And indeed could I be as easy and happy here as I used to be, I would defy that man and all his Sex; and never repent that I have given the power of my fortune into my Father's hands.

Just now, my Mother has rejoiced me with the news that my requested permission is granted. Every one thinks it best that I should go to you, except my Brother. But he was told, that he must not expect to rule in every thing. I am to be sent for into the Great

. I.

ake

me

nay

But

ce;

ay,

w,

go.

ve.

dI

the ace

hey

en-

om

ned

to lest ink

boo

of

en-

as

l to

1 fo

and

and

the

the

ery

my ect

the

Great Parlour, where are my two Uncles and my Aunt Hervey, and to be acquainted with this concession in form.

You know, my dear, that there is a good deal of folemnity among us. But never was there a family more united in its different branches than ours. Our Uncles consider us as their own children, and declare, that it is for our sakes they live single. So that they are advised with upon every article relating to us, or that may affect us. It is therefore the less wonder, at a time when they understand that Mr. Lovelace is determined to pay us an amicable visit, as he calls it (but which I am sure cannot end amicably) that they should both be consulted upon the permission I had desired to attend you.

I WILL acquaint you with what passed at the general leave given me to be your guest. And yet I know that you will not love my Brother the better for my communication. But I am angry with him myself, and cannot help it. And besides, it is proper to let you know the terms I go upon, and their motives for permitting me to go.

Clary, said my Mother, as soon as I entered the Great Parlour, your request to go to Miss Howe's for a few days has been taken into consideration, and granted—

Much against my liking, I assure you, said my Brother, rudely interrupting her.

Son James! said my Father, and knit his brows.—
He was not daunted. His arm is in a sling. He often has the mean art to look upon that, when anything is hinted that may be supposed to lead towards the least favour to or reconciliation with Mr. Lovelace.—Let the girl then [I am often the girl with him] be prohibited seeing that vile Libertine.

Nobody spoke.

Do you hear, Sifter Clary? taking their filence for

L

B

fi

tl

approbation of what be had dictated; you are not to receive vifits from Lord M's Nephew.

Every one still remained filent.

Do you so understand the licence you have, Miss?

interrogated he.

I would be glad, Sir, faid I, to understand that you are my Brother; -and that you would understand that you are only my Brother.

O the fond, fond heart! with a fneer of infult.

lifting up his hands.

Sir, said I to my Father, to your justice I appeal : If I have deserved reflection, let me not be spared. But if I am to be answerable for the rashness-

No more !- No more of either fide, faid my Father. You are not to receive the visits of that Lovelace, tho'.- Nor are you, Son James, to reflect upon your Sifter. She is a worthy child.

Sir. I have done, replied he ;- and yet I have her honour at heart, as much as the honour of the reft of the family.

And bence, Sir, retorted I, your unbrotherly reficctions upon me?

Well but you observe, Mis, said he, that it is not I, but your Father, that tells you, that you are not to receive the vifits of that Lovelace.

Coulin Harlowe, faid my Aunt Hervey, allow me to fay, That my Coufin Clary's prudence may be confided in.

Lam convinced it may, joined my Mother.

But, Aunt, but, Madam (put in my Sifter) there is no hurt. I prefume, in letting my Sister know the condition the goes to Miss. Howe upon; fince, if he gets a knack of viliting her there-

You may be fure, interrupted my Uncle Harlowe, he will endeavour to tee her there.

So would fuch an impudent man bere, faid my Uncle Antony: And 'tis better there than here.

Better no-where, faid my Father .- I command you (turning (turning to me) on pain of displeasure, that you see him not at all.

I will not, Sir, in any way of encouragement, I do affure you: Not at all, if I can properly avoid it.

You know with what indifference, said my Mother, the has hitherto seen him.—Her prudence may be trusted to, as my Sister Hervey says.

With what appa-rent indifference, drolled my Brother.

Son James, faid my Father, sternly!"

I have done, Sir, faid he. But again, in a provoking manner, he reminded me of the prohibition.

Thus ended this conference.

Will you engage, my dear, that the hated man shall not come near your house?—But what an inconfistence is this, when they consent to my going, thinking his visits here no otherwise to be avoided!—But if he does come, I charge you never leave us alone together.

As I have no reason to doubt a welcome from your good Mother, I will put every thing in order here, and be with you in two or three days.

Mean time, I am

Your most affectionate and obliged,
GLARISSA HARLOWE.

LETTER VII.

Mis CLARISSA HARLOWE, To Mis Howe.

[After ber return from ber.]

Harlowe-Place, Feb. 20.

I BEG your excuse for not writing sooner. Alas, my dear, I have sad prospects before me! My Brother and Sister have succeeded in all their views. They have sound out another Lover for me; an hideous one!—Yet he is encouraged by every body. No wonder that I was ordered home so suddenly. At

an lifs?

L. [. ot to

that

you

eal:

red.

Fa-

ber reft

re-

me be here

the f he

we,

you

LE

fro

bu

Ch

ge

COI

fol

he

Ic

I

ou

ch

fix

mi

wi

Ai

no

pa

tha

for fol

bo

m

m

re

ra

mo

pa

al

te

up

an

W

an hour's warning!-No other notice, you know, than what was brought with the chariot that was to earry me back.—It was for fear, as I have been informed [an unworthy fear!] that I should have entered into any concert with Mr. Lovelace had I known their motive for commanding me home; apprehending, 'tis evident, that I faould diflike the man they had to propose to me.

And well might they apprehend fo:- For who do you think he is?-No other than that Solmes!-Could you have believed it? -And they are all determined too; my Mother with the rest!-Dear, dear excellence! how could she be thus brought over, when I am affured, that on his first being proposed she was pleased to say, That had Mr. Solmes the Indies in possession, and would endow me with them, she should not think him deserving of her Clarissa!

The reception I met with at my return, so different from what I used to meet with on every little abfence [And now I had been from them three weeks] convinced me that I was to fuffer for the happiness I had had in your company and conversation for that most agreeable period. I will give you an account of

My Brother met me at the door, and gave me his hand when I stepped out of the chariot. He bowed very low; Pray, Miss, favour me.-I thought it in good humour; but found it afterwards mock-respect: And so he led me in great form, I prattling all the way, enquiring of every body's health, (altho' I was fo foon to fee them, and there was hardly time for anfwers) into the Great Parlour; where were my Father, Mother, my two Uncles, and Sifter.

I was struck all of a heap as soon as I entered, to fee a folemnity which I had been fo little used to on the like occasions in the countenance of every dear relation. They all kept their feats. I ran to my Father, and kneeled: Then to my Mother: And met

from

LET. 7. CLARISSA HARLOWE.

from both a cold falute: From my Father a bleffing but half pronounced: My Mother indeed called me Child; but embraced me not with her usual indulgent ardor.

After I had paid my duty to my Uncles, and my compliments to my Sister, which she received with solemn and stiff form, I was bid to sit down. But my heart was full: And I said it became me to stand, if I could stand, upon a reception so awful and unusual. I was forced to turn my face from them, and pull out my handkerchief.

My unbrotherly accuser hereupon stood forth, and charged me with having received no less than five or fix visits at Miss Howe's from the man they had all so much reason to hate [that was the expression]; not-withstanding the commands I had had to the contrary.

And he bid me deny it if I could.

I had never been used, I said, to deny the truth, nor would I now. I owned I had in the three weeks passed seen the person I presumed he meant oftener than five or six times [Pray hear me, Brother, said I; for he was going to slame out]. But he always asked for Mrs. or Miss Howe, when he came.

I proceeded, That I had reason to believe, that both Mrs. Howe and Miss, as matters stood, would much rather have excused his visits; but they had more than once apologized, that having not the same reason my Papa had to forbid him their house, his rank and fortune entitled him to civility.

You fee, my dear, I made not the pleas I might have made.

· I

w,

to

in-

IP-

an

do

-

er-

en

as ·

in

he

r-

bsl

I

at

of 13 bs

in

:

ne

as

1-

1-

n

ar

y

n

My Brother seemed ready to give a loose to his passion: My Father put on the countenance which always portends a gathering storm: My Uncles mutteringly whispered: And my Sister aggravatingly held up her hands. While I begged to be heard out;—and my Mother said, Let the child, that was her kind word, be heard.

I hoped,

LE

mui wit

face

kno

tha

2 16

voi

who mu tler

1

WO

Ha

wai

add

app

to did

Moz

add

tive

the

foo

be

did

the

fho

for juff

the

I hoped, I said, there was no harm done: That it became not me to prescribe to Mrs. or Miss Howe who should be their visiters: That Mrs. Howe was always diverted with the raillery that passed between Miss and him: That I had no reason to challenge her guest for my visiter, as I should seem to have done had I refused to go into their company when he was with them: That I had never seen him out of the presence of one or both of those Ladies; and had signified to him once, on his urging for a few moments private conversation with me, that unless a Reconciliation were effected between my family and his, he must not expect that I would countenance his visits, much less give him an opportunity of that fort.

I told them further, That Miss Howe so well understood my mind, that she never left me a moment while Mr. Lovelace was there: That when he came, if I was not below in the parlour, I would not suffer myself to be called to him: Altho' I thought it would he an affectation which would give him advantage rather than the contrary, if I had left company when he came in; or refused to enter into it when I found he would flay any time.

My Brother heard me out with such a kind of impatience as shewed he was resolved to be distaissfied with me, say what I would. The rest, as the event has proved, behaved as if they would have been satisfied, had they not further points to carry by intimidating me. All this made it evident, as I mentioned above, that they themselves expected not my voluntary compliance; and was a tacit confession of the disagreeableness of the person they had to propose.

I was no fooner filent than my Brother fwore, altho' in my Father's presence (swore, unchecked either by eye or countenance) That for his part, he would never be reconciled to that Libertine: And that he would renounce me for a Sister, if I encouraged the addresses of a man so obnoxious to them all.

A man

: 1

it it

owe

W28

een

ber

had

rith

nce

l to rate

ion

fluc

uch.

un-

ent

ne,

ffer.

uld

age

ien

ind

SEC.

mfied

ent

tif-

ni-

red

m-

he

re,

ed

he

at

he

an

A man who had like to have been my Brother's murderer, my Sifter said, with a face even bursting with restraint of passion.

The poor Bella has, you know, a plump high fed face, if I may be allowed the expression. You, I know, will forgive me for this liberty of speech sooner than I can forgive myself: Yet how can one be such a reptile as not to turn when trampled upon!

My Father, with vehemence both of action and voice [my Father has, you know, a terrible voice when he is angry!] told me that I had met with too much indulgence in being allowed to refuse this gentleman, and the other gentleman; and it was now his turn to be obeyed.

Very true, my Mother said :- And hoped his will would not now be disputed by a child so favoured.

To hew they were all of a fentiment, my Uncle Harlowe faid, He hoped his beloved Niece only wanted to know her Eather's will, to obey it.

And my Uncle Antony, in his rougher manner, added, That furely I would not give them reason to apprehend, that I thought my Grandfather's favour to me had made me independent of them all.—If I did, he would tell me, the Will could be set aside, and should.

I was aftonished, you must needs think.—Whose addresses now, thought I, is this treatment preparative to?—Mr. Wyerley's again?—or whose? And then, as high comparisons, where self is concerned, sooner than low, come into young peoples heads; be it for whom it will, this is wooing as the English did for the heiress of Scotland in the time of Edward the Sixth. But that it could be for Solmes, how should it enter into my head?

I did not know, I faid, that I had given occasion for this harshness. I hoped I should always have a just sense of every one's favour to me, superadded to the duty I owed as a Daughter and a Niece: But

that

LE

Siff

pri

all

YOU

Un

he

low

faic

My

and

wh

of

Sol

So

Bu

and

par

of

T

15

Set

fan

I i

oft

Un

fau

that I was so much surprised at a reception so unusual and unexpected, that I hoped my Papa and Mamma would give me leave to retire, in order to recolled myfelf.

No one gainfaying, I made my filent compliments, and withdrew;—leaving my Brother and Sifter, as I thought, pleased; and as if they wanted to congratulate each other on having occasioned so severe a beginning to be made with me.

I went up to my chamber, and there with my faithful Hannah deplored the determined face which the new proposal it was plain they had to make me wore.

I had not recovered myself when I was sent for down to Tea. I begged by my maid to be excused attending; but on the repeated command, went down with as much chearfulness as I could assume; and had a new fault to clear myself of: For my Brother, so pregnant a thing is determined ill-will, by intimations equally rude and intelligible, charged my desire of being excused coming down, to Sullens, because a certain person had been spoken against, upon whom, as he supposed, my fancy ran.

I could easily answer you, Sir, said I, as such a reflection deserves: But I forbear. If I do not find a Brother in you, you shall have a Sister in me.

Pretty meeknes! Bella whisperingly said; looking at my Brother, and lifting up her lip in contempt.

He, with an imperious air, bid me deserve his Love, and I should be fure to bave it.!

As we sat, my Mother, in her admirable manner expatiated upon brotherly and sister love; indulgently blamed my Brother and Sister for having taken up displeasure too lightly against me; and politically, is I may so say, answered for my obedience to my Father's will.—Then it would be all well, my Father was pleased to say: Then they should dote upon me, was my Brother's expression: Lave me as well as ever, was my Sister's:

Sifter's: And my Uncle's, That I then should be the pride of their hearts .- But, alas! what a forfeiture of all thefe must I make!

This was the reception I had on my return from you.

D. I.

ufual

mma

olled

ents,

ratu-

a beaith.

h the

me

t for cufed

own

and

ther,

imaefire

use a

iom,

ch a

find

king

his nner ent-

n up

y 11

Fa-

Was

my

my

r's:

Mr. Solmes came in before we had done Tea. My Uncle Antony prefented him to me, as a gentleman. he had a particular friendship for. My Uncle Harlowe in terms equally favourable for him. My Father faid, Mr. Solmes is my friend, Clarissa Harlowe. My Mother looked at him, and looked at me, now and then, as he fat near me, I thought with concern. -I at ber, with eyes appealing for pity. At bim, when I could glance at him, with difgust little short of affrightment. While 'my Brother and Sifter Mr. Solmes'd him, and Sirr'd him up, at every word. So carefied, in short, by all;—yet such a wretch !-But I will at present only add, My humble thanks and duty to your honoured Mother (to whom I will particularly write, to express the grateful Sense I have of her goodness to me); and that I am

Your ever obliged.

VISHEDIO VISI S But gard CL. HARLOWE.

LETTER VIII. gallbarety

Mils CLARISSA HARLOWE, To Mils Howe. age flupid, I wing. They have b

Feb. 24.

THEY drive on here at a furious rate. man lives here, I think. He courts them, and is more and more a favourite. Such Terms, fuch Settlements! That's the cry.

O my dear, that I had not reason to deplore the family-fault, immensely rich as they all are! But this I may the more unreservedly say to you, as we have often joined in the same concern: I, for a Father and Uncles; you, for a Mother; in every other respect faultlels.

of xand Hitherto

Hitherto, I feem to be delivered over to my Brother, who pretends as great Love to me as ever.

You may believe, I have been very fincere with him. But he affects to railly me, and not to believe it possible, that one so dutiful and so discreet as his Sister Clary can resolve to disoblige all her friends.

Indeed, I tremble at the prospect before me; for it is evident that they are strangely determined.

My Father and Mother industriously avoid giving me opportunity of speaking to them alone. They ask not for my approbation, intending, as it should seem, to suppose me into their will. And with them I shall hope to prevail, or with nobody. They have not the interest in compelling me, as my Brother and Sister have: I say less therefore to them, reserving my whole force for an audience of my Father, if he will permit me a patient ear. How difficult is it, my dear, to give a negative where both duty and inclination join to make one wish to oblige!

I have already frood the shock of three of this man's particular visits, besides my share in his more general ones; and find it is impossible I should ever endure him. He has but a very ordinary share of understanding; is very illiterate; knows nothing but the value of Estates, and how to improve them, and what belongs to Land jobbing and Husbandry. Yet am I as one stupid, I think. They have begun so cruelly with me, that I have not spirit enough to affert my own Negative.

They had endeavoured, it seems, to instuence my good Mrs. Norton before I came home—So intent are they to carry their point! And her opinion not being to their liking, she has been told that she would do well to decline visiting here for the present: Yet she is the person of all the world, next to my Mother, the most likely to prevail upon me, were the measures they are engaged in reasonable measures, or such as she could think so.

My

LE

her

has fino

the

fhe

ceiv

am

sha

1

be

nex

day

Lo

me.

cha

real

the cou

the rec

to

attı

his

wh

to

thei

one

bal

cee

I

I

VOL. I.

My Auntlikewise having said that she did not think her Niece could ever be brought to like Mr. Solmes, has been obliged to learn another lesson.

I am to have a visit from her to-morrow. And, since I have refused so much as to hear from my Brother and Sister what the noble Settlements are to be, she is to acquaint me with the particulars; and to receive from me my determination: For my Father, I am told, will not have patience but to suppose that I shall stand in opposition to his will.

Mean time it has been fignified to me, that it will be acceptable if I do not think of going to church next Sunday.

L. I.

Bro-

with ieve

his

for ving

afk

em,

hall

not

lfter

hole per-

, to

john

this fore

ever

e of

but

and

Yet

n fo

Tert

my

ent

not uld

Yet

ier,

res

as

My

s.

The same signification was made me for last Sunday; and I obeyed. They are apprehensive that Mr. Lovelace will be there with design to come home with me.

Help me, dear Miss Howe, to a little of your charming spirit: I never more wanted it.

The man, this Solmes, you may suppose, has no reason to boast of his progress with me. He has not the fense to say any thing to the purpose. His courtthip indeed is to them; and my Brother pretends to court me as his proxy, truly !- I utterly to my Brother reject his address; but thinking a person so well received and recommended by all my family, entitled to good manners, all I fay against him is affectedly attributed to coyness: And he, not being sensible of his own imperfections, believes that my avoiding him when I can, and the referves I express, are owing to nothing else: For, as I said, all his courtship is to them; and I have no opportunity of faying No, to one who alks me not the question. And fo, with an air of mannish superiority, he seems rather to pity the bashful girl, than to apprehend that he shall not succeed.

I HAVE had the expected conference with my Aunt.

LE

vou

wel.

till

fing

obe

tori

imp

call

opii

had thou

all 1

I fe

wor

And

Ho

ting

1

E

I

1

I

I have been obliged to hear the man's propofals from her; and have been also told what their motives are for espousing his interest with so much warmth. I am even loth to mention how equally unjust it is for him to make fuch offers, or for those I am bound to reverence to accept of them. I hate him more than before. One great Estate is already obtained at the expence of the relations to it, tho' distant relations; my Brother's, I mean, by his Godmother: And this has given the hope, however chimerical that hope, of procuring others; and that my own at last may revert to the family. And yet in my opinion the World is but one great family. Originally it was fo. What then is this narrow felfishness that reigns in us, but relationship remembered against relationship forgot?

But here, upon my absolute resusal of him upon any terms, have I had a signification made me that wounds me to the heart. How can I tell it you? Yet I must. It is, my dear, that I must not for a month to come, or till licence obtained, correspond with any-body out of the house.

My Brother, upon my Aunt's report (made, however, as I am imformed, in the gentlest manner, and even giving remote hopes, which she had no commission from me to give) brough me, in authoritative terms, the prohibition.

Not to Miss Howe ? faid I.

No, not to Mifs Howe, Madam, tauntingly: For have you not acknowledged, that Lovelace is a favourite there?

See, my dear Miss Howe!-

And do you think, Brother, this is the way-

Do you look to that.—But your Letters will be stopt, I can tell you .- And away he flung.

My Sister came to me soon after—Sister Clary, you are going on in a fine way, I understand. But as there are people who are supposed to harden you against your

I ca Fat

che S My

and lids My your duty, I am to tell you, that it will be taken well if you avoid visits or visitings for a week or two till further order.

Can this be from those who have authority-

Ask them; ask them, child, with a twirl of her finger.—I have delivered my Message. Your Father will be obeyed. He is willing to hope you to be all obedience, and would prevent all incitements to refactoriness.

I know my duty, said I; and hope I shall not find impossible conditions annexed to it.

A pert young creature, vain and conceited, she called me. I was the only judge in my own wise opinion, of what was right and sit. She, for her part, had long seen into my specious ways: And now I should shew every-body what I was at bottom.

Dear Bella, faid I! hands and eyes lifted up-why all this?—Dear, dear Bella, why—

None of your dear, dear Bella's to me.—I tell you, I see through your witcherasts [That was her strange word]. And away she slung; adding, as she went, And so will every-body else very quickly, I dare say.

Bless me, said I to myself, what a Sifter have I!-

How have I deferved this?

Then I again regretted my Grandfather's too diftinguishing goodness to me.

Feb. 25. in the Evening.

WHAT my Brother and Sifter have faid against me I cannot tell:—But I am in heavy disgrace with my Father.

I was fent for down to Tea. I went with a very chearful aspect: But had occasion soon to change it.

Such a Solemnity in every-body's countenance!— My Mother's eyes were fixed upon the tea-cups; and when she looked up, it was heavily, as if her eyelids had weights upon them; and then not to me.
My Father sat half-aside in his elbow-chair, that his nft our

. I.

fals

ves

ith.

t is

and han

the

ns;

this

pe,

nay.

the

fo.

in

hip

any nds

uft.

ne,

out

w-

and

m-ive

or

fa-

be

ry,

as

.

and waving, as it were, up and down; his fingers, poor dear gentleman! in motion, as if angry, to the very ends of them. My Sifter fat swelling. My Brother looked at me with fcorn, having measured me, as I may fay, with his eyes as I entered, from head to foot. My Aunt was there, and looked upon me as if with kindness restrained, bending coldly to my compliment to her as the fat; and then cast an eye first on my Brother, then on my Sister, as if to give the reason [so I am willing to construe it] of her not thought either unperfuadable or ungenerous! I took my feat. Shall I make Tea, Madam, to my Mother?-I always used, you know, my dear, unusual stiffness .- Bless me, my dear ! that they should chuse to intimidate rather than invite a mind, till now, to make Tea.

No! a very fhort fentence, in one very short word, was the expressive answer. And the was pleased to take the canister in her own hand.

My Brother bid the footman who attended, leave the room; I, faid he, will pour out the water.

My heart was up at my mouth. I did not know what to do with myself. What is to follow? thought I.

Just after the second dish, out stept my Mother-A word with you, Sifter Hervey! taking her in her hand. Prefently my Sifter dropt away. Then my Brother. So I was left alone with my Father.

He looked so very sternly, that my heart failed me as twice or thrice I would have addressed myself to him: Nothing but solemn filence on all hands having passed before,

At last, I asked, If it were his pleasure that I should pour him out another dish?

. He answered me with the same angry monosyllable, which I had received from my Mother before; and then arose, and walked about the room. I arose too, with intent to throw myfelf at his feet; but was too much bell

At gout, coura acqua

flowed

Harlo Go never

He

No he. dulge for m

> My more altho' world I prote to! I child. Sir

Te and v Go

my S Y girl! my F Ar

Ho I afk comp

T from N

vsvre diugnit

much over-awed by his sternness, even to make such an expression of my duty to him as my heart overslowed with.

At last, as he supported himself, because of his gout, on the back of a chair, I took a little more courage; and approaching him, besought him to acquaint me in what I had offended him.

He turned from me, and in a strong voice, Clariffa Harlowe, faid he, know that I will be obeyed.

God forbid, Sir, that you should not !- I have never yet opposed your will-

I.

ı,

s,

0

e

y)

e

d

,

.

7

Nor I your whimfies, Clariffa Harlowe, interrupted he.—Don't let me run the fate of all who shew indulgence to your Sex; To be the more contradicted for mine to you.

My Father, you know, my dear, has not (any more than my Brother) a kind opinion of our Sex; altho' there is not a more condescending Wife in the world than my Mother.

I was going to make protestations of duty—No protestations, girl! No words! I will not be prated to! I will be obeyed! I have no child, I will have no child, but an obedient one.

Sir, you never had reason, I hope-

Tell me not what I never had, but what I have, and what I shall have.

Good Sir, be pleased to hear me-My Brother and my Sifter, I fear-

Your Brother and Sister shall not be spoken against, girl!—They have a just concern for the honour ofmy Family.

And I hope, Sir-

Hope nothing.—Tell me not of hopes, but of facts. I ask nothing of you but what is in your power to comply with, and what it is your duty to comply with.

Then, Sir, I will comply with it-But yet I hope from your goodness-

No expostulations! No but's, girl! No qualifyings!

I will be obeyed, I tell you; and chearfully too!-

I wept.

Let me befeech you, my dear and ever-honoured Papa (and I dropt down on my knees) that I may have only yours and my Mamma's will, and not my Brother's, to obey.

I was going on; but he was pleased to withdraw, leaving me on the stoor; saying, That he would not hear me thus by subtilty and cunning aiming to distinguish away my duty; repeating, that he would be obeyed.

My heart is too full;—so full, that it may endanger my duty, were I to try to unburden it to you on this occasion: So I will lay down my pen.—But can—Yer, positively, I will lay down my pen!—

LETTER IX.

Miss CLARISSA HARLOWE, To Miss Howe.

Feb. 26. in the Morning.

Higgs I rectioned we vison I down

MY Aunt, who staid here last Night, made me a visit this morning as soon as it was light. She tells me, that I was lest alone with my Father yesterday on purpose that he might talk with me on my expected obedience; but that he owned he was put beside his purpose by reseasing on something my Brother had told him in my disfavour, and by his impatience but to suppose, that such a gentle spirit as mine had hitherto seemed to be, should presume to dispute his will in a point where the advantage of the whole samily was to be so greatly promoted by my compliance.

I find, by a few words which dropt unawares from my Aunt, that they have all an absolute dependence upon what they suppose to be meekness in my temper. But in this they may be mistaken; for I verily think, upon a strict examination of myself, that I

946

Mot upon the pless prefi

not

IV.

LET

have the to elute her) will with shall that fays, in co him (mea rath me,

SI

it is, wou into is all ther out ther othe that with ever depr have almost as much in me of my Father's as of my Mother's Family. A dour driw marzingo, gamana we.

My Uncle Harlowe it feems is against driving me upon extremities: But my Brother has engaged, that the regard I have for my reputation, and my principles, will bring me round to my duty; that's the ex-Perhaps I shall have reason to wish I had I ou tagil remember the Green !

not known this.

ed

ay

ny)

w, ot if-

uld

er nis

g.

e a

he

er-

X.

e-9

ner

ce

ad

his ole

mmc

ce

mily

31

ave

My Aunt advises me to submit for the present to the interdicts they have laid me under; and indeed to encourage Mr. Solmes's address. I have absolutely refused the latter, let what will (as I have told her) be the consequence. The visiting prohibition I will conform to. But as to that of not corresponding with you, nothing but the menace that our Letters shall be intercepted can engage my observation of it.

She believes that this order is from my Father, and that my Mother has not been consulted upon it. She fays, that it is given, as the has reason to think, purely in confideration to me, left I should mortally offend him; and this from the incitements of other people (meaning you and Miss Lloyd, I make no doubt) rather than by my own will. For still, as she tells me, he speaks kind and praiseful things of me.

Here is clemency! Here is indulgence!—And fo it is, To prevent a headstrong child, as a good Prince would wish to deter disaffected subjects, from running into rebellion, and fo forfeiting every-thing! But this is all owing to the Young-man's wildom of my Brother; a Plotter without a head, and a Brother without a heart.

How happy might I have been with any other Brother in the world but James Harlowe; and with any other Sister but bis Sister! Wonder not, my dear, that I, who used to chide you for these fort of liberties with my relations, now am more undutiful than you ever was unkind. I cannot bear the thought of being deprived of the principal pleasure of my life; for such

LE

and

this

wh

mu

ver

the

mi

it,

be

mu

kn

for

to fu

to

ha

pe

to ha

th

W

UG

p cl

u

to 158

1

is your conversation by Person and by Letter. And who, befides, can bear to be made the dupe of fuch low cunning, operating with fuch high and arrogant pations with theines at amen to sweet

But can you, my dear Miss Howe, condescend to carry on a private correspondence with me?-If you can, there is one way I have thought of, by which it may be done, of notary sweet little

You must remember the Green Lane, as we call it, that runs by the fide of the Wood-house and Poultryyard where I keep my Bantams, Pheafants, and Peahens, which generally engage my notice twice a day; the more my favourites because they were my Grandfather's, and recommended to my care by him; and therefore brought hither from my Dairy-house fince bis death. The said to saein s

The Lane is lower than the floor of the Woodhouse; and in the side of the Wood-house the boards are rotted away down to the floor for half an ell together in feveral places. Hannah can flep into the Lane, and make a mark with chalk where a Letter or Parcel may be pushed in, under some sticks; which may be fo managed as to be an unsuspected cover for the written deposits from either.

e kind and sale times of me I HAVE been just now to look at the place, and find it will answer. So your faithful Robert may, without coming near the house, and as only passing thro' the Green Lane which leads to two or three farm-houses [out of livery if you please] very easily take from thence my Letters, and deposit yours.

This place is the more convenient, because it is feldom reforted to but by myfelf or Hannah, on the above mentioned account; for it is the general storehouse for firing; the wood for constant use being nearer the house.

One corner of this being separated off for the roofting-place of my little poultry, either the or I shall never want a pretence to go thither. Try, Try, my dear, the success of a Letter this way; and give me your opinion and advice what to do in this disgraceful situation, as I cannot but call it; and what you think of my prospects; and what you would do in my case.

But before-hand I will tell you, that your advice must not run in favour of this Solmes: And yet it is very likely they will endeavour to engage your Mother, in order to induce you, who have such an influence over me, to favour him.

Yet, on fecond thoughts, if you incline to that fide of the question, I would have you write your whole mind. Determined as I think I am, and cannot help it, I would at least give a patient hearing to what may be said on the other side. For my regards are not so much engaged [Upon my word they are not; I know not myself if they be] to another person as some of my friends suppose; and as you, giving way to your lively vein, upon his last visits, affected to suppose. What preserable savour I may have for him to any other person, is owing more to the usage he has received, and for my sake borne, than to any personal consideration.

happy period. I fear I shall never know such another. I hope she will forgive me, that I did not

Are you in carnett to Bur it will not not son after

J.

d ıt

0 u

it

.

d

e

S

,

The bearer, if suspected and examined, is to produce that as the only one he carries.

How do needless watchfulness and undue restraint produce artifice and contrivance! I should abhor these clandestine correspondencies, were they not forced upon me. They have so mean, so low an appearance to myself, that I think I ought not to expect that you should take part in them.

But why (as I have also expostulated with my Aunt) must I be pushed into a State, which I have no wish

D 3

antolivi muor bita

But here I conclude these unavailing expostulations, with the assurance, that I am, and ever will be,

Your affectionate, CLARISSA HABLOWE.

TER T. TERLE X. TO THE STATE OF Miss Howe, To Miss CLARISSA HARLOWS.

TIT HAT odd heads fome neonle have la Min

WHAT odd heads fome people have !- Miss Clariffa Harlowe to be factified in marriage to Mr. Roger Solmes!-Astonishing!

I must not, you say, give my advice in favour of this man!—You now convince me, my dear, that you are nearer of kin than I thought you, to the family that could think of so preposterous a match, or you would never have had the least notion of my advising in his favour.

Ask for his picture. You know I have a good hand at drawing an ugly likeness. But I'll see a little further first: For who knows what may happen, since matters are in such a train; and fince you have not the courage to oppose so overwhelming a tortent?

You ask me to help you to a little of my spirit. Are you in earnest? But it will not now I doubt do you service.—It will not sit naturally upon you. You are your Mother's girl, think what you will; and have violent spirits to contend with. Alas! my dear, you should have borrowed some of mine a little sooner;—that is to say, before you had given the management of your estate into the hands of those who think they have a prior claim to it. What tho' a Father's !—Has not that Father two elder children!—And do they not both bear more of his stamp and image than this ing,

LET

pron Av to l

Fue tiate all

> Let in I

ten

thi my

fa M. w th

a h

.0

not

to bluc

ns,

III.

13

16

.

ils

to

is

t

d

d

e nody.

you do?—Pray, my dear, call me not to account for this free question; lest your application of my meaning, on examination, prove to be as severe as that.

Now I have launched out a little, indulge me one word more in the same strain—I will be decent, I promise you. I think you might have known, that AVARICE and ENVY are two passions that are not to be satisfied, the one by giving, the other by the envied person's continuing to deserve and excel.—Fuel, suel both, all the world over, to stames insatiate and devouring.

But fince you ask for my opinion, you must tell me all you know or surmise of their inducements. And if you will not forbid me to make extracts from your Letters for the entertainment of my Aunt and Cousin in the little Island, who long to hear more of your affairs, it will be very obliging.

But you are so tender of some people who have no tenderness for any-body but themselves, that I must conjure you to speak out. Remember, that a friendthip like ours admits of no referves. You may trust my impartiality. It would be an affront to your own judgment, if you did not: For do you not ask my advice? And have you not taught me that friendship should never give a bias against justice? - Justify them therefore if you can. Let us fee if there be any fenfe, whether sufficient reason or not, in their choice. Atprefent I cannot (and yet I know a good deal of your family) have any conception how all of them, your Mother and your Aunt Hervey in particular, can join with the rest against judgments given. As to some of the others, I cannot wonder at any-thing they do or attempt to do where Self is concerned.

You alk, Why may not your Brother be first engaged in Wedlock? I'll tell you why: His temper and his arrogance are too well known to induce women he would aspire to, to receive his addresses, notwithstanding his great independent acquisitions and still greater

D 4.

19712919

W

fi

greater prospects. Let me tell you, my dear, those acquisitions have given him more pride than reputation. To me he is the most intolerable creature that I ever conversed with. The treatment you blame, he merited from one whom he addressed with the air of a person who presumes that he is about to confer a favour, rather than to receive one. I ever loved to mortify proud and insolent spirits. What, think you, makes me bear Hickman near me, but that the man is humble, and knows and keeps his distance?

As to your Question, Why your elder Sister may not be first provided for? I answer, Because she must have no man, but one who has a great and clear lestate; that's one thing. Another is, Because she has a younger Sister. Pray, my dear, be so good as to tell me, What man of a great and clear Estate would think of that elder Sister, while the younger were single?

You are all too rich to be happy, child. For must not each of you, by the constitutions of your family, marry to be still richer? People who know in what their main excellence consists, are not to be blamed (are they?) for cultivating and improving what they think most valuable?—Is true happiness any part of your family view?—So far from it, that none of your family but yourself could be happy were they not rich. So let them fret on, grumble and grudge, and accumulate; and wondering what ails them that they have not happiness when they have riches, think the cause is want of more; and so go on heaping up, till Death, as greedy an accumulator as themselves, gathers them into his garner.

Well then once more I say, do you, my dear, tell me what you know of their avowed and general motives; and I will tell you more than you will tell me of their failings! Your Aunt Hervey, you say (a), has told you: Why must I ask you to let me know them when you condescend to ask my advice on the occa-

That they prohibit your corresponding with me, is a wisdom I neither wonder at, nor blame them for: Since it is an evidence to me, that they know their own folly: And if they do, is it strange that they should be afraid to trust another's judgment upon it?

I am glad you have found out a way to correspond with me. Lapprove it much. I shall more, if this first trial of it prove successful. But should it not, and should it fall into their hands, it would not concern me but for your fake.

L. I.

hofe

utathat

me,

air

fer a

d to

ou,

nan

nay

ruft

ear

the

as

ate

ger

uft

ly,

nat

ed

ey

of

ur

h.

u-

ve

ſe

h,

m

11

-

of

15

We have heard before you wrote, that all was not right between your relations and you at your coming home: That Mr. Solmes visited you, and that with a prospect of success. But I concluded the mistake lay in the person; and that his address was to Miss Arabella. And indeed had she been as good-natured as your plump ones generally are, I should have thought her too good for him by half. This must certainly be the thing, thought I, and my beloved friend is fent for to advise and affist in her nuptial preparations. Who knows, faid I to my Mother, but that when the man has thrown afide his yellow fullbuckled peruke, and his broad-brimmed beaver (both of which I suppose were Sir Oliver's Best of long flanding) he may cut a tolerable figure dangling to church with Miss Bell! - The woman, as she obferves, should excel the man in features: And where can the match fo well for a foil?

I indulged this surmise against rumour, because I could not believe that the absurdest People in England could be so very absurd as to think of this man.

for you.

other the a We heard moreover, that you received no visitors. I could affign no reason for this; except that the preparations for your Sifter were to be private, and the ceremony sudden, for fear this man should, as another

D 5

LE

pull

mag

avie

way

wa

can cor

lies

elp

pol

Lo

an

he

to

Uı

W

w

W

W

m

m fu

fa

man did, change his mind. Miss Lloyd and Miss Biddulph were with me to enquire what I knew of this; and of your not being at Church, either Morning or Asternoon, the Sunday after your return from us; to the disappointment of a little hundred of your admirers, to use their words. It was easy for me to guess the reason to be what you confirm—Their apprehensions that Lovelace would be there, and attempt to wait on you home.

My Mother takes very kindly your compliments in your Letter to her. Her words upon reading it were; Miss Clarissa Harlowe is an admirable young Lady: Where-ever she goes, she confers a favour: Whomever she leaves, she fills with regret. —And then a little comparative resection: O my Nancy, that you had a little of her sweet obligingness!

No matter. The praise was yours. You are me; and I enjoyed it. The more enjoyed it, because—Shall I tell you the truth?—Because I think myself as well as I am—Were it but for this reason: That had I twenty Brother James's, and twenty Sister Bell's, not one of them, nor all of them joined together, would dare to treat me as yours presume to treat you. The person who will bear much shall have much to bear, all the world thro': 'Tis your own sentiment (a), grounded upon the strongest instance that can be given in your own Family; tho' you have so little improved by it.

The result is this, That I am fitter for this world than you: You for the next than me;—that's the difference.—But long, long, for my sake, and for hundreds of sakes, may it be before you quit us for company more congenial to you and more worthy of you!

MARCH.

formide, par mineriters.

I communicated to my Mother the account you give of your strange reception; also what a horrid wretch they have found out for you; and the com-

(a) P. 30.

pulfory

pulfory treatment they give you. It only fet her on magnifying her lenity to me on my tyrannical behaaviour, as the will call it [Mothers must have their way, you know, my dear] to the man whom the fo warmly recommends, against whom it seems there can be no just exception; and expatiating upon the complaifance I owe her for her indulgence. So I believe I must communicate to her nothing fartherespecially as I know she would condemn the correspendence between us, and That between you and Lovelace, as clandestine and undutiful proceedings, and divulge our Secret befides: For duty implicit is her cry. And moreover the lends a pretty open ear to the preachments of that starch old Bachelor your Uncle Antony; and for an example to ber Daughter would be more careful how the takes your part, be the cause ever so just.

Yet is not this right policy neither. For people who allow nothing will be granted nothing: In other words, those who aim at carrying too many points will not be able to carry any.

But can you divine, my dear, what that old preachment-making plump-hearted foul your Uncle Antony means by his frequent amblings hither?—There is fuch fmirking and fmiling between my Mother and him! Such mutual praises of Œconomy; and 'That' is my way!'—and 'This! do!'—and 'I am glad it' has your approbation, Sir!—and 'You look into 'every-thing, Madam!'—'Nothing would be done, 'if I did not!'—Such exclamations against servants! Such exaltings of self! And dear-heart, and good lack!'—and 'las a-day!—And now and then their conversation sinking into a whispering accent, if I come cross them!—I'll tell you, my dear, I don't above half like it.

Only that these old Bachelors usually take as many years to resolve upon Matrimony as they can reasonably expect to live, or I should be ready to fire upon

difco

felle

B

than

my

upo

in

ent

hin

ve

yo

el

ti

VOL. I.

his visits; and to recommend Mr. Hickman to my Mother's acceptance, as a much more eligible man: For what he wants in years, he makes up in gravity? And if you will not chide me, I will say, That there is a primness in both (especially when the man has prefuned too much with me upon my Mother's favour for him, and is under discipline on that account) as makes them seem near of kin: And then in contemplation of my sauciness, and what they both bear from it, they sigh away!—and seem so mightily to compassionate each other, that if Pity be but one remove from Love, I am in no danger, while they both are in a great deal, and don't know it.

Now, my dear, I know you will be upon me with your grave airs: So in for the lamb, as the faying is, in for the sheep; and do you yourself look about you: For I'll have a pull with you by way of being aforehand. Hannibal, we read, always advised to attack the Romans upon their own territories.

You are pleased to say, and upon your word too! That your regards (a mighty quaint word for affellions) are not so much engaged, as some of your friends suppose, to another person. What need you give one to imagine, my dear, that the last month or two has been a period extremely savourable to that other person;—whom it has made an obliger of the Niece for his patience with the Uncles.

But, to pass that by—So much engaged!—How much, my dear?—Shall I infer? Some of your friends suppose a great deal. You seem to own a little.

Don't be angry. It is all fair: Because you have not acknowledged to me That little. People I have heard you say, who affect secrets, always excite curiosity.

But you proceed with a kind of drawback upon your averrment, as if recollection had given you a doubt—You know not yourself, if they be [fo much engaged]. Was it necessary to fay This, to me?—

and

and to say it upon your word too?—But you know best —Yet you don't neither I believe. For a beginning Love is acted by a subtle spirit; and oftentimes discovers itself to a by-stander, when the person possessed (why should I not call possessed) knows not it has such a demon.

But further you say, What PREFERABLE favour you may have for him to any other Person, is owing more to the usage he has received, and for your sake borne, than to any personal consideration.

. I.

my

in:

y :

ere

re-

as n-

m

n.

re

e

b

V

This is generously said. It is in character. But, O my friend, depend upon it, you are in danger. Depend upon it, whether you know it or not, you are a little in for't. Your native generosity and greatness of mind endanger you: All your friends, by fighting against him with impolitic violence, fight for him. And Lovelace, my life for yours, notwithstanding all his veneration and assiduities, has seen further than that veneration and those assiduities (so well calculated to your meridian) will let him own he has seen—Has seen, in short, that his work is doing for him more effectually than he could do it for himself. And have you not before now said, That nothing is so penetrating as the Eye of a Lover who has vanity? And who says Lovelace wants vanity?

In short, my dear, it is my opinion, and that from the easiness of his heart and behaviour, that he has seen more than I have seen; more than you think could be seen—more than I believe you your self know, or else you would let me know it.

Already, in order to restrain him from resenting the indignities he has received, and which are daily offered him, he has prevailed upon you to correspond with him privately. I know he has nothing to boast of from what you have written: But is not his inducing you to receive his Letters, and to answer them, a great point gained? By your insisting that he should keep this correspondence private, it appears that there is one secret fpeed you

1111

to

WI

m

1

W

fecret which you do not wish the world should know: And he is master of that secret. He is indeed himself, as I may say, that secret! What an intimacy does this beget for the Lover! How is it distancing the Parent!

Yet who, as things are fituated, can blame you?—Your condescention has no doubt hitherto prevented great mischiefs. It must be continued, for the same reasons, while the cause remains. You are drawn in by a perverse sate against inclination: But custom, with such laudable purposes, will reconcile the inconveniency and make an inclination.—And I would advise you (as you would wish to manage on an occasion so critical with that prudence which governs all your actions) not to be afraid of entering upon a close examination into the true springs and grounds of this your generosity to that happy man.

It is my humble opinion, I tell you frankly, that on enquiry it will come cut to be LOVE—Don't start, my dear!—Has not your man himself had natural philosophy enough to observe already to your Aunt Hervey, that Love takes the deepest root in the steadiest minds? The duce take his sly penetration, I was going to say; for this was Six or Seven weeks ago.

I have been tinctured, you know. Nor on the coolest resection, could I account how and when the jaundice began: But had been over head and ears, as the saying is, but for some of that advice from you which I now return you. Yet my man was not half so—So what, my dear—To be sure Lovelace is a charming sellow. And were he only—But I will not make you glow, as you read—Upon my word I will not.—Yet, my dear, don't you find at your heart somewhat unusual make it go throb, throb, as you read just here?—If you do, don't be ashamed to own it—It is your generosity, my Love! that's all.—But, as the Roman augur said, Cæsar, beware of the Ides of March!

Adieu, my dearest friend, Forgive, and very, speedily,

CLARISSA HARLOWE.

. 4

w:

felf, this nt!

-

ted me

in

m,

n-

d-

on .

ur

Kis .

n.

L

t

.

fneedily, by the new-found expedient, tell me, that you forgive, Your ever-affectionate ANNA HOWE. ted to vilit us with a hope; which,

mucos of minitas of all to B.R. XI.

Miss CLARISSA HARLOWE, To Miss Howe.

an lo sloages dem niev & Wednesday, March Y. UOU both nettled and alarmed me, my dearest! Mils Howe, by the concluding part of your last. At first reading it, I did not think it necessary, said I to myself, to guard against a Critic, when I was writing to fo dear a Friend. But then recollecting myfelf, Is there not more in it, faid I, than the refult of a vein to naturally lively? Surely I must have been guilty of an inadvertence. Let me enter into the close examination of myself which my beloved friend advifes.

I do fo; and cannot own any of the glow, any of the throbs you mention - Upon my word I will repeat, I cannot. And yet the passages in my Letter upon which you are so humorously severe, lay me fairly. open to your agreeable raiflery. I own they do. And I cannot tell what turn my mind had taken to dictate so oddly to my pen.

211111

But, pray-now-Is it faying fo much, when one who has no very particular regard to any man, fays, There are some who are preferable to others? And is it blameable to fay, They are the preferable, who are not well used by one's relations; yet dispense with that usage out of regard to one's felf which they would otherwise resent? Mr. Lovelace, for instance, I may be allowed to fay, is a man to be preferred to Mr. Solmes; and that I do prefer him to that man: But, furely, this may be faid without its being a necessary confequence that I must be in Love with him.

Indeed I would not be in Love with him, as it is (4) 1, 15 15 15, 15, collect.

LE

thi

the

wi

ne

yo

fo

of

W

tr

pi

th

W

P

П

2

n

2

1

·f

called, for the world : First, because I have no opinion of his morals; and think it a fault in which our whole family (my Brother excepted) has had a share, that he was permitted to vifit us with a hope; which, however being distant, did not, as I have observed heretofore (a), intitle any of us to call him to account for fuch of his immoralities as came to our ears. Next, because I think him to be a vain man, capable of triumphing (fecretly at least) over a person whose heart he thinks he has engaged. And, thirdly, because the affiduities and veneration which you impute to him, feem to carry an haughtiness in them, as if he thought his address had a merit in it, that would be more than an equivalent to a woman's Love. In short, his very Politeness, notwithstanding the advantages he must have had from his birth and education, appear to me to be constrained; and, with the most remarkably easy and genteel person, something, at times, feems to be behind in his manner that is too fludiously kept in. Then, good-humoured as he is thought to be in the main to other peoples fervants, and this even to familiarity (altho, as you have observed, a familiarity that has dignity in it not unbecoming a man of quality) he is apt sometimes to break out into a passion with his own: An oath or a curse follows; and fuch looks from those servants as plainly new terror; and that they should have fared worse had they not been in my hearing: With a confirmation in the master's looks of a surmize too well justified.

Indeed, my dear, This man is not THE man. I have great objections to him. My heart threbs not after him. I glow not, but with indignation against myself for having given room for such an imputation.

—But you must not, my dearest friend, construe common Gratitude into Love. I cannot bear that you should. But if ever I should have the missortune to think it Love, I promise you upon my word, which is the same as upon my bonour, that I will acquaint you with it.

LET. II.

OL. I

opi.

h our hare,

hich,

erved

ount

Vext,

f tri-

reart

e the

nim,

ight.

gore

ort,

ages

ap-

nost

at.

too

e is

ts,

be-

ak

fe

ly

fe :

2-

I

t ŧ

.

You bid me to tell you very speedily, and by the new-found expedient, that I am not displeased with you for your agreeable raillery: I dispatch this therefore immediately; postponing to my next the account of the inducements which my friends have to promote with so much earnestness the address of Mr. Solmes.

Be fatisfied, my dear, mean time, that I am not displeased with you: Indeed I am not. On the contrary, I give you my hearty thanks for your friendly premonitions. And I charge you (as I have often done) that if you observe any thing in me so very faulty as would require from you to others in my behalf the palliation of friendly and partial Love, you acquaint me with it: For methinks I would so conduct myself as not to give reason even for an adversary to censure me: And how shall so weak and so young a creature avoid the censure of such, if my friend will not hold a looking-glass before me to let me see my impersections?

Judge me, then, my dear, as any indifferent perfon (knowing what you know of me) would do. I may at first be a little pained; may glow a little perhaps to be found less worthy of your friendship than I wish to be; but assure yourself, that your kind correction will give me reflection that shall amend me. If it do not, you will have a fault to accuse me of, that will be utterly inexcusable: A fault, let me add, that should you not accuse me of it (if in your opinion I am guilty) you will not be so much, so warmly, my friend as I am yours; since I have never spared you on the like occasions.

Here I break off; to begin another Letter to you; with the assurance, mean time, that I am, and ever will be,

Your equally affectionate and grateful

CL. HARLOWE.

all yel ban

LE

chi

mil

wh

tivi

thi

kn

and 6 1

6:4

4

60

.

.

.

8

.

m

fil

W

g tè

9

3

LETTER XII.

Miss Howe, To Miss CLARISSA HARLOWE.

Thursday Morn. March 2.

INdeed you would not be in Love with him for the world!—Your fervant, my dear. Nor would I have you. For I think, with all the advantages of person, fortune, and family, he is not by any means worthy of you. And this opinion I give as well from the reasons you mention (which I cannot but confirm) as from what I have heard of him but a few hours ago from Mrs. Fortescue, a favourite of Lady Betty Lawrance, who knows him well—But let me congratulate you, however, on your being the first of our Sex that ever I heard of, who has been able to turn that Lion, Love, at her own pleasure into a Lap-dog.

Well but, if you have not the throbs and the glows, you have not: And are not in Love; good reason why-because you would not be in Love; and there's no more to be faid, -Only, my dear, I shall keep a good look-out upon you; and fo I hope you will upon yourfelf: For it is no manner of argument that because you would not be in Love, you therefore are not.—But before I part entirely, with this subject, a word in your ear, my charming friend-'Tis only by way of caution, and in pursuance of the general obfervation, that a Stander-by is often a better judge of the game than those that play.-May it not be, that you have had, and have, fuch crois creatures and fuch odds heads to deal with, as have not allowed you to attend to the throbs?—Or, if you had them a little now-and-then, whether, having had two accounts to place them to, you have not by mistake put them to the wrong one

But whether you have a value for Lovelace or not, I know you will be impatient to hear what Mrs. Fortescue has said of him. Nor will I keep you longer in suspense. L. I.

. . .

r the

ild f

per-

rom

irm)

ago

late

that ion,

SIII

ws,

re's

pa

oon.

ba-

are

by

ah-

Qf.

ch.

to.

to.

to 8 ţ,

-

er.

od8 a

An hundred wild stories she tells of him, from childhood to manhood: For, as she observes, having never been subject to contradiction, he was always as mischievous as a monkey. But I shall pass over these whole hundred of his puerile rogueries (altho' indicative ones, as I may say) to take notice as well of some things you are not quite ignorant of, as of others you know not; and to make a few observations upon him and his ways.

Mrs. Fortescue owns, what every body knows, that he is notoriously, nay, avowedly, a man of pleafure; yet fays, that in any thing he fets his heart upon or undertakes, he is the most industrious and persevering mortal under the Sun. He rests it feems not above Six hours in the Twenty-four—any more than you. He delights in writing. Whether at Lord M's, or at Lady Betty's, or Lady Sarah's, he has always a pen in his fingers when he retires. One of his companions (confirming his love of writing) has told her, that his thoughts flow rapidly to his pen: And you and I, my dear, have observed, on more occasions than one, that tho he writes even a fine hand, he is one of the readiest and quickest of writers. He must indeed have had early a very docile genius; since a person of his pleasurable turn and active spirit, could never have submitted to take long or

tive spirit, could never have submitted to take long or great pains in attaining the qualifications he is master of; qualifications so seldom attained by youth of quality and fortune; by such especially of those of either, who, like him, have never known what it was to be controlled.

He had once it seems the vanity, upon being complimented on these talents (and on his surprising diligence, for a man of pleasure) to compare himself.

to Julius Cæfar, who performed great actions by day, and wrote them down at night: And valued himself, that he only wanted Cæsar's out-setting, to.

make a figure among his cotemporaries.

He

. 6 5

6 ha

( na

as N

4 am

6 of

he n as th

mit

time

N

is

6 th

faid

that

Mr

c re

6 h

6.4

6 6

hin

ho

Cal

th

de

ca

he

th

is

th

it

W

h

2

W

OF orbane . He spoke this indeed, she says, with an air of pleafantry: For the observed, and so have we, that he has the art of acknowledging his vanity with fo much humour, that it fets him above the contempt which is due to vanity and felf-opinion; and at the same time half perfuades those who hear him, that he really deserves the exaltation he gives himself." But supposing it to be true that all his vacant nightly hours are employed in writing, what can be his fubjects? If, like Cæfar, his own actions, he must undoubtedly be a very enterprifing and very wicked man; fince nobody suspects him to have a serious turn: And. decent as he is in his conversation with us, his writings are not probably fuch as would redound either to his own honour, or to the benefit of others, were they to be read. He must be conscious of this, fince Mrs. Fortescue says, ' that in the great correspondence by Letters which he holds, he is as secret and as careful as if it were of a treasonable nature; - yet troubles not his head with Politics, tho' nobody knows the interests of Princes and Courts better than he is faid to do.

That you and I, my dear, should love to write, is no wonder. We have always, from the time each could hold a pen, delighted in epistolary correspondencies. Our employments are domestic and sedentary; and we can scribble upon twenty innocent subjects, and take delight in them because they are innocent; tho' were they to be feen, they might not much profit or please others. But that such a gay, lively young fellow as this, who rides, hunts, travels, frequents the public entertainments, and has means to pursue his pleasures, should be able to set himself down to write for hours together, as you and I have heard him fay he frequently does, that is the strange thing.

Mrs. Fortescue says, 'that he is a complete master of short-hand writing.' By the way, what inducements could fuch a fwift writer as he have to learn 6. She hort-hand!

c. L

lea

t he

uch

lich

ame

he

ht-

ub-

-nu

an;

nd,

ngs

his

ley

rs.

by ful

les.

he

is

is

ch

d -

7;

S,

it

g

e

6

1:

She fays (and we know it as well as she) that he has a surprising memory; and a very lively imagi-

Whatever his other vices are, all the world, as well as Mrs. Fortefcue, fays, 'he is a fober man. And 'among all his bad qualities, Gaming, that great wafter of time as well as fortune, is not his vice:' So that he must have his head as cool, and his reason as clear, as the prime of youth and his natural gaiety will permit; and by his early morning hours, a great portion of time upon his hands, to employ in writing, or worse.

Mrs. Fortescue says, 'he has one gentleman who is more his intimate and correspondent than any of the rest.' You remember what his dismissed Bailiss said of him and of his associates (a). I don't find but that man's character of him was in general pretty just. Mrs. Fortescue confirms this part of it, 'that all his relations are assaid of him; and that his pride sets him above owing obligations to them. She believes he is clear of the world; and that he will continue so: No doubt from the same motive that makes him avoid being obliged to his relations.

A person willing to think savourably of him would hope, that a brave, a learned, and a diligent man, cannot be naturally a bad man.—But if he be better than his enemies say he is (and if worse, he is bad indeed) he is guilty of an inexcusable fault in being so careless as he is of his reputation. I think a man can be so but from one of these two reasons: Either that he is conscious he deserves the ill spoken of him; or, that he takes a pride in being thought worse than he is. Both very bad and threatening indications; since the first must shew him to be utterly abandoned; and it is but natural to conclude from the other, that what a man is not ashamed to have imputed to him, he will not scruple to be guilty of whenever he has an opportunity.

LE

OC

ne

fh:

the

be

TI

the

he

cal

fef

lity

adi

wi

lov

he

tha

efp

cef

tio

VOI

kir

20

Upon the whole, and upon all I could gather from Mrs. Fortescue, Mr. Lovelace is a very faulty man. You and I have thought him too gay, too inconsiderate, too rash, too little an hypocrite, to be deep. You see he never would disguise his natural temper (haughty as it certainly is) with respect to your Brother's behaviour to him. Where he thinks a contempt due, he pays it to the uttermost. Nor has he complaisance enough to spare your Uncles.

But were he deep, and ever so deep, you would soon penetrate him, if they would leave you to yourfelf. His vanity would be your clue. Never man had more: Yet, as Mrs. Fortescue observed, 'never did man carry it off so happily.' There is a strange mixture in it of humorous vivacity:—Since but for one half of what he says of himself, when he is in the vein, any other man would be insufferable.

TALK of the devil, is an old faying. The lively wretch has made me a visit, and is but just gone away. He is all impatience and resentment at the treatment you meet with; and full of apprehensions too, that they will carry their point with you.

I told him my opinion, that you will never be brought to think of fuch a man as Solmes; but that it will probably end in a composition, never to have either.

No Man, he faid, whose fortunes and alliances are so considerable, ever had so little favour from a woman for whose sake he had borne so much.

I told him my mind as freely as I used to do. But who ever was in fault, Self being judge? He complained of spies set upon his conduct, and to pry into his life and morals, and this by your Brother and Uncles.

I told him, that this was very hard upon him; and the more so, as neither his Life nor Morals perhaps would stand a fair enquiry.

He

He smiled, and called himself my servant.—The occasion was too fair, he said, for Miss Howe, who never spared him, to let it pass.—But, Lord help the shallow souls of the Harlowes! Would I believe it? they were for turning plotters upon bim. They had best take care he did not pay them in their own coin. Their hearts were better turned for such works, than their heads.

I asked him, if he valued himself upon having a head better turned than theirs for fuch works, as he called them?

He drew off: And then ran into the highest professions of reverence and affection for you.

The object so meritorious, who can doubt the reality of his professions?

L. I.

ther

ulty

in-

o be ura

your

con-

ould

our-

had

did

nix-

one

the

.

vely

way.

that

e be

that have

s are

wo.

But

om-

into

and

and haps

He

Adieu, my dearest, my noble friend!—I love and admire you for the generous conclusion of your last more than I can express. Tho' I began this Letter with impertinent raillery, knowing that you always loved to indulge my mad vein; yet never was there a heart that more glowed with friendly Love, than that of

Your own

ANNA Howe.

LETTER XIII.

Miss CLARISSA HARLOWE, To Miss Howe.

Wedn. March 1.

I NOW take up my pen, to lay before you the inducements and motives which my friends have to espouse so earnestly the address of this Mr. Solmes.

In order to set this matter in a clear light, it is necessary to go a little back, and even perhaps to mention some things which you already know: And so you may look upon what I am going to relate, as a kind of Supplement to my Letters of the 15th and 20th of January last (a).

(a) Letters iv, v.

Li

w

wi

us

int

po

DO

in

the

bv

all

fat

of he

ma

ter

No

. 7

1 2

e te

· f ofte

con

be i

( W

[the

by :

hav

c c

Th

·T c th

ufec

fhe

incu

mak

In those Letters, of which I have kept memorandums, I gave you an account of my Brother's and Sister's antipathy to Mr. Lovelace; and the methods they took (so far as they had then come to my knowledge) to ruin him in the opinion of my other friends. And I told you, that after a very cold, yet not a directly affrontive behaviour to him, they all of a sudden (a) became more violent, and proceeded to perfonal insults; which brought on at last the unhappy Rencounter between my Brother and him.

Now you must know, that from the last converfation that passed between my Aunt and me, it comes out, that this fudden vehemence on my Brother's and Sister's parts, was owing to stronger rea-fons than to the College-begun antipathy on his side, or to flighted Love on her's; to wit, to an apprehenfion that my Uncles intended to follow my Grandfather's example in my favour; at least in a higher degree than they wish they should. An apprehension founded it feems on a conversation between my two Uncles and my Bro her and Sifter; which my Aunt communicated to me in confidence, as an argument to prevail upon me to accept of Mr. Solmes's noble Settlements; urging, that fuch a feafonable compliance would frustrate my Brother's and Sister's views, and establish me for ever in the Love of my Father and Uncles.

I will give you the Substance of this communicated conversation, after I have made a brief introductory observation or two: Which however I hardly need to make to you who are so well acquainted with us all, did not the series or thread of the Story require it.

I have more than once mentioned to you the darling view some of us have long had of raising a family, as it is called: A reflection, as I have often thought, upon our own; which is no inconsiderable or upstart one, on either side: On my Mother's, especially.— . I.

an-

nd

abo

W-ds.

di-

id-

er-

py

er-

it

0-

a-ie,

n-

a-

e-

on

VO

nt

nt

ble

n-r's

by

ed

ry

to 11,

r-

y,

t,

rt

A

A view too frequently it feems entertained by families which having great substance, cannot be satisfied without Rank and Title.

My Uncles had once extended this view to each of us three children; urging, that as they themselves intended not to marry, we each of us might be fo portioned, and so advantageously matched, as that our posterity, if not ourselves, might make a first figure in our country—While my Brother, as the only Son, thought the two girls might be very well provided for by Ten or Fifteen thousand pounds apiece: And that all the real Estates in the family, to wit, my Grandfather's, Father's, and two Uncles, and the remainder of their respective personal Estates, together with what he had an expectation of from his Godmother, would make such a noble fortune, and give him such an interest, as might entitle him to hope for a Peerage. Nothing less would satisfy his ambition.

With this view he gave himself airs very early; That his Grandfather and Uncles were his Stew-' ards: That no man ever had better: That Daughters were but incumbrances and drawbacks upon a ' family:' And this low and familiar expression was often in his mouth, and uttered always with the felfcomplaifance which an imagined happy thought can be supposed to give the speaker; to wit, 'That a man' who has Sons bring up chickens for his own table, tho' once I made his comparison stagger with him, by asking him, If the Sons, to make it hold, were to have their necks wrung off?] 'whereas Daughters are ' chickens brought up for the Tables of other men.' This accompanied with the equally polite reflection. That to induce people to take them off their hands, the family-stock must be impaired into the bargain, used to put my Sister out of all patience: And altho' the now feems to think a younger Sifter only can be an incumbrance, the was then often proposing to me to make a party in our own favour against my Brother's VOL. I. rapacious

LE

pof

cou

M's

tion

ceed

cam

agai

men dit

his

and

occa

too

And

to b

com

that

the

com

wou

ulua

new havi

he

ma

mo oft

Lo

by

app

rep

tim

fur

not

T

Y

N

rapacious views, as the used to call them: While I was for considering the liberties he took of this sort as the effect of a temporary pleasantry; which in a young man not naturally good bumoured, I was glad to see; or as a soible that deserved raillery, but no other notice.

But when my Grandfather's Will (of the purport of which in my particular favour, until it was opened, I was as ignorant as they) had lopped off one branch of my Brother's expectation, he was extremely diffatisfied with me. No-body indeed was pleased: For altho' every one loved me, yet being the youngest child, Father, Uncles, Brother, Sister, all thought themselves postponed, as to matter of right and power [Who loves not power?]: And my Father himself could not bear that I should be made Sole, as I may call it, and Independent; for such the Will, as to that Estate and the powers it gave (unaccountably as they all faid) made me.

To obviate therefore every one's jealoufy, I gave up to my Father's management, as you know, not only the Estate, but the Money bequeathed me (which was a moiety of what my Grandfather had by himat his death; the other majery being bequeathed to my Sifter); contenting myself to take as from his bounty what he was pleafed to allow me, without defiring the least addition to my annual stipend. And then I hoped I had laid all envy affeep: But fill my Brother and Sifter (jealous, as now is evident, of my two Uncles favour for me, and of the pleasure I had given my Father and them by this act of duty) were every nowand-then occasionally doing me covert ill offices: Of which, however, I took the less notice, when I was told of them, as I thought I had removed the cause of their envy; and I imputed every-thing of that fort to the petulance they are both pretty much noted for.

My Brother's acquisition then took place. This made us all very happy; and he went down to take poffession

possession of it: And his absence (on so good an account too) made us still happier. Then sollowed Lord M's proposal for my Sister: And this was an additional selicity for the time. I have told you how exceedingly good-humoured it made my Sister.

You know how that went off: You know what came on in its place.

L

e l

as

1 2

lad

no

110

ed,

ch

Ta-

or elt

the

ven

felf

ay

hat

ney

ave

not ich

at

my

aty

the

ped

ind

les

a-

W-

Of

Va9

10

to

his

ke

ion

My Brother then returned; and we were all wrong again: And Bella, as I observed in my Letters above-mentioned, had an opportunity to give herself the credit of having refused Mr. Lovelace, on the score of his reputed faulty morals. This united my Brother and Sister in one cause. They set themselves on all occasions to depreciate Mr. Lovelace, and his family too (a family which deserves nothing but respect): And this gave rise to the conversation I am leading to between my Uncles and them: Of which I now come to give the particulars; after I have observed, that it happened before the Rencounter, and soon after the enquiry made into Mr. Lovelace's affairs had come out better than my Brother and Sister hoped it would (a).

They were bitterly inveighing against him, in their usual way, strengthening their invectives with some new Stories in his disfavour; when my Uncle Antony, having given them a patient hearing, declared, 'That he thought the gentleman behaved like a gentleman; his Niece Clary with prudence; and that a more honourable alliance for the samily, as he had often told them, could not be wished for; Since Mr. Lovelace had a very good paternal Estate; and that, by the evidence of an enemy, all clear. Nor did it appear, that he was so bad a man as he had been represented to be: Wild indeed; but it was at a gay time of life: He was a man of sense: And he was sure that his Niece would not have him, if she had not good reason to think him reformed, or that there

(a) See Letter iv. p. 22.

.L

ft

tv

W

I

ti

g

P

I

ti

y.

11

V

fa

.6

6.

6.

.

6

6.

6.

6.

6.

.

6,

was a likelihood that she could reform him by her example.

My Uncle then gave one instance, my Aunt told me, as a proof of a generosity in Mr. Lovelace's spirit, which convinced him, that he was not a bad man in nature; and that he was of a temper, he was pleased to say, like my own: Which was, That when he (my Uncle) had represented to him, that he might, if he pleased, make three or sour hundred pounds a year of his paternal Estate, more than he did; he answered, 'That his tenants paid their rents well: That it was a maxim with his samily, from which he would by no means depart, Never to rack-rent old tenants, or their descendants; and that it was a pleasure to him, to see all his tenants look fat, sleek, and contented.'

I indeed had once occasionally heard him say something like this; and thought he never looked so well as at the time;—except once; and that was in an instance given by him on the following incident.

An unhappy tenant of my Uncle Antony came petitioning to my Uncle for forbearance, in Mr. Lovelace's presence. When he had fruitlessly withdrawn, Mr. Lovelace pleaded his cause so well, that the man was called in again, and had his suit granted. And Mr. Lovelace privately followed him out, and gave him two guineas, for present relief; the man having declared, that, at the time, he had not five shillings in the world.

On this occasion, he told my Uncle (but without any airs of ostentation) That he had once observed an old tenant and his wife in a very mean habit at church; and questioning them about it next day, as he knew they had no hard bargain in their farm, the man said. He had done some very soolish things with a good intention, which had put him behind-hand, and he could not have paid his rent, and appear better. He asked him how long it would take him to retreve the soolish from ften he acknowledged he had made. He faid, Perhaps two or three years. Well then, faid he, I will abate you five pounds a year for feven years, provided you will lay it out upon your wife and felf, that you may make a Sunday-appearance like MY tenants. Mean time, take This (putting his hand in his pocket, and giving him five guineas) to put yourselves in present plight; and let me see you next Sunday at church, hand in hand, like an honest and loving couple; and I bespeak you to dine with me afterwards.

Altho' this pleased me when I heard it, as giving an instance of generosity and prudence at the same time, not lessening (as my Uncle took notice) the yearly value of the farm, yet, my dear, I had no throbs, no glows upon it !- Upon my word, I had not. Nevertheless I own to you, that I could not help faying to myself on the occasion, 'Were it ever to be my lot to have this man, he would not hinder " me from pursuing the methods I so much delight to take'-With 'A pity, that fuch a man were not countries with the countries

" uniformly good!"

. I.

her

told

fpi-

man

afed

he

ght,

s a

an-

hat

he

old

1S 2

eek,

me-

well

an

pe-

ove-

wn,

man

And

zave

ving

ings

out

d an

ch;

new

aid,

in-

ould

fked

olia

ftep

Forgive me this digreffion. My Uncle went on (as my Aunt told me) That, besides his paternal Estate, he was the immediate heir to very splendid fortunes: That, when he was in treaty for his Niece Arabella, Lord M. told him ' (my Uncle) what great things he and his two Halffifters intended to do for him, in order to qualify him for the Title, which would be extinct at his Lordship's death, and which they hoped to procure for him, or a still higher, that of those Ladies Father, which had been for some time extinct on failure of heirs male: That it was with this view that his relations were all so earnest for his marrying: That as he faw not where Mr. Lovelace could better himself; so, truly, he thought there was wealth enough in their own family to build up three considerable ones: That therefore he must

E 3

befo

6/120

e it

· 2!

1ect

to C

hav

to t

ing

the

rati

hav

the

was

and

of I

cee

Th

if I

to

to me.

Da

her hor

Suc

not

Mr

fo '

tha

the

Re

it i

lifi

I

F

needs fay, he was the more defirous of this alliance as there was a great probability, not only from Mr.

Lovelace's descent, but from his fortunes, that his Niece Clarissa might one day be a Peeress of Great Britain :- And upon that prospect [Here was the

" mortifying stroke] he should, for his own part, think it not wrong to make such dispositions as

· should contribute to the better support of the dignity.'

My Uncle Harlowe, it seems, far from disapproveing of what his Brother had said, declared, 'That there was but one objection to an alliance with Mr.

Lovelace; to wit, his faulty morals: Especially as fo much could be done for Miss Bella, and for my Brother too, by my Father; and as my Brother was actually possessed of a considerable Estate by virtue of the Deed of Gift and Will of his Godmother Lovell.

wondered at many things I have been unable to account for in my Brother's and Sifter's behaviour to me; and been more on my guard than I imagined there was a necessity to be.

You may easily guess how much this conversation affected my Brother at the time. He could not, you know, but be very uneasy to hear two of his Stewards talk at this rate to his face.

He had from early days, by his violent temper, made himself both seared and courted by the whole family. My Father himself, as I have lately mentioned, very often (long before my Brother's acquisitions had made him still more assuming) gave way to him as to an only Son who was to build up the name, and augment the honour of it. Little inducement therefore had my Brother to correct a temper which gave him so much consideration with everybody.

See, Sifter Bella,' faid he, in an indecent paffion

. I.

M:.

his

eat

the art,

29 ig-

ve-

hat

Ar.

as

TIY

ner

by od-

ve

C-

to

ed

oh

ρģ

ds

r,

le

r-

1-

Y

16

e-

er

7-

n

re

before my Uncles, on this occasion I have mentioned -See how it is!—You and I ought to look about to!—This little Syren is in a fair way to out-uncle, as the has already out-grandfather'd us both!

From this time (as I now find it plain upon recollection) did my Brother and Sifter behave to me, as to one who flood in their way; and to each other, as having but one interest: And were resolved therefore to bend all their force to hinder an alliance from taking effect, which they believed was likely to oblige them to contract their views.

And how was this to be done, after fuch a declaration from both my Uncles?

My Brother found out the way. My Sifter (as I have faid) went hand in hand with him. Between them, the family-union was broken, and every-one was made uneafy. Mr. Lovelace was received more and more coldly by all: But not being to be put out of his course by Slights only, personal Affronts succeeded; Defiances next; then the Rencounter: That, as you have heard, did the bufiness: And now, if I do not oblige them, my Grandfather's Estate is to be litigated with me; and I, who never designed to take advantage of the independency bequeathed me, am to be as dependent upon my Father's will, as a Daughter ought to be who knows not what is good for herself. This is the language of the family now.

But if I will suffer myself to be prevailed upon, how happy (as they lay it out) shall we all be!—Such presents am I to have, such jewels, and I cannot tell what, from every one of the family! Then Mr. Solmes's fortunes are so great, and his proposals so very advantageous (no Relation whom he values) that there will be abundant room to raise mine upon them, were the high-intended savours of my own Relations to be quite out of the question. Moreover it is now, with this view, sound out, that I have qualifications which of themselves will be a full equivalent

E 4

I

W

t fl

CE

0

C

ti

P

ta

ti

0

20

N

(1

ea

E

bl

in fil

ol

ho

te

I

fit

th

pe

tiv

m

ftill leave bim under an obligation to me for my compliance. He himself thinks so, I am told—So very poor a creature is he, even in bis own eyes, as well as in theirs.

These desirable views answered, how rich, how splendid shall we all three be! And I—what obligations shall I lay upon them all!—And that only by doing an act of duty so suitable to my character, and manner of thinking; if indeed I am the generous as well as dutiful creature I have hitherto made them believe I am.

This is the bright fide that is turned to my Father and Uncles, to captivate them: But I am afraid, that my Brother's and Sifter's defign is to ruin me with them at any rate. Were it otherwise, would they not on my return from you have rather sought to court than frighten me into measures which their hearts are so much bent to carry? A method they have followed ever since.

Mean time, orders are given to all the servants to shew the highest respect to Mr. Solmes; the generous Mr. Solmes is now his character with some of our family! But are not these orders a tacit confession, that they think his own merit will not procure him respect? He is accordingly, in every visit he makes, not only highly caressed by the principals of our family, but obsequiously attended and cringed to by the menials.—And the noble Settlements are echoed from every mouth.

Noble is the word used to enforce the offers of a man who is mean enough avowedly to hate, and wicked enough to propose to rob of their just expectations, his own family (every one of which at the same time stands in too much need of his favour) in order to settle all he is worth upon me; and if I die without children, and he has none by any other Marriage, upon a family which already abounds. Such are his proposals.

and

om-

very well

how

iga-

y by

and

s as hem

ther

that

with

they

t to

heir

they

s to rous

fa-

that

re-

kes,

fa-

by

loed

of a

and cta-

the

) in die

Tar-

uch

But

But were there no other motive to induce me to despise the upstart man, is not this unjust one to his samily enough?—The upstart man, I repeat; for he was not born to the immense riches he is possessed of: Riches lest by one niggard to another, in injury to the next heir, because that other is a niggard. And should I not be as culpable, do you think, in my acceptance of such unjust Settlements, as he is in the offer of them, if I could persuade myself to be a sharer in them, or suffer a reversionary expectation of possessing them to influence my choice?

Indeed it concerns me not a little, that my friends could be brought to encourage such offers on such motives as I think a person of conscience should not prefume to begin the world with.

But this it seems is the only method that can be taken to disappoint Mr. Lovelace; and at the same time to answer all my Relations have to wish for each of us. And surely I will not stand against such an accession to the samily as may happen from marrying Mr. Solmes: Since now a possibility is discovered (which such a grasping mind as my Brother's can easily turn into a probability) that my Grandsather's Estate will revert to it, with a much more considerable one of the man's own. Instances of Estates falling in, in cases far-more unlikely than this, are insisted upon; and my Sister says, in the words of an old Saw, It is good to be related to an estate.

While Solmes, smiling no doubt to himself at a hope so remote, by offers only, obtains all their interests; and doubts not to join to his own the Estate I am envied for; which, for the conveniency of its situation between two of his, will it seems be of twice the value to him that it would be of to any other person; and is therefore, I doubt not, a stronger motive with him than the Wife.

These, my dear, seem to me the principal inducements of my Relations to espouse so vehemently as

L

le

ur

ne

up

on

W

bl

pr

be

of

a

of

on

th

fh

fay

pr

ev

gir

ha

del

rer

un

has

im

they do this man's fuit. And here, once more, must I deplore the family-fault, which gives those inducements such a force as it will be difficult to resist.

And thus far, let matters with regard to Mr. Solmes and me come out as they will, my Brother has fucceeded in his views; that is to fay, he has, in the first place, got my FATHER to make the cause his own, and to insist upon my compliance as an act of duty.

My MOTHER has never thought fit to oppose my Father's will, when once he has declared himself determined.

My UNCLES, stiff, unbroken, highly-prosperous Bachelors, give me leave to say (tho' very worthy persons in the main) have as high notions of a Child's duty, as of a Wise's obedience; in the last of which, my Mother's meekness has confirmed them, and given them greater reason to expect the first.

My Aunt HERVEY (not extremely happy in her own Nuptials, and perhaps under some little obligation) is got over, and chuses not to open her lips in my favour against the wills of a Father and Uncles so determined.

This paffiveness in my Mother and in my Aunt, in a point so contrary to their own first judgments, is too strong a proof that my Father is absolutely resolved.

Their treatment of my worthy Mrs. Norton is a fad confirmation of it: A woman deserving of all confideration for her wisdom; and every-body thinking so; but who, not being wealthy enough to have due weight in a point against which she has given her opinion, and which they seem bent upon carrying, is restrained from visiting here, and even from corresponding with me, as I am this very day informed.

Hatred to Lovelace, family-aggrandizement, and this great motive paternal authority!—What a force united must they be supposed to have when singly each consideration is sufficient to carry all before it!

This

This is the formidable appearance which the address of this disagreeable man wears at present.

My BROTHER and my SISTER triumph.—They have got me down, as Hannah over-heard them exult. And so they have (yet I never knew that I was insolently up); for now my Brother will either lay me under an obligation to comply to my own unhappinels, and so make me an instrument of his revenge upon Lovelace; or, if I refuse, will throw me into difgrace with my whole family.

Who will wonder at the intrigues and plots carried on by undermining Courtiers against one another, when a private family, but three of which can possibly have clashing interests, and one of them (as she presumes to think) above such low motives, cannot be free from them?

What at present most concerns me, is the peace of my Mother's mind! How can the Husband of such a Wise (a good man too!—But oh! this prerogative of manhood!) be so positive, so unpersuadeable, to one who has brought into the family, means, which they know so well the value of, that methinks they should value her the more for their sake?

They do indeed value her: But, I am forry to fay, she has purchased that value by her compliances: Yet has merit for which she ought to be venerated; prudence which ought of itself to be conformed to in every-thing.

I.

e-

c-

he

115

of

ny

e-

us

hy

18

h,

en

er

2-

in

les

in

00

15

all

k-ve

er

is

end

ce

ch

is

But whither roves my pen? How dare a perverse girl take these liberties with relations so very respectable, and whom the highly respects? What an unhappy situation is that which obliges her, in her own defence as it were, to expose their failings?

But you, who know how much I love and reverence my Mother, will judge what a difficulty I am under, to be obliged to oppose a scheme which she has engaged in. Yet I must oppose it (to comply is impossible); and must without delay declare my oppo-

E 6

fition,

LE

no

me

kii

en

wi

yo

M

ha

ne

Sh

m

pr

ift

an

an

1

fe

W

to

fre

th

pa W

M it

ar I

fition, or my difficulties will increase; fince as I am just now informed, a Lawyer has been this very day consulted [Would you have believed it?] in relation to Settlements.

Were ours a Roman Catholic family, how much happier for me, that they thought a Nunnery would answer all their views !- How happy, had not a certain person slighted somebody! All then would have been probably concluded on between them before my Brother had arrived to thwart the match: Then had I had a Sifter; which now I have not; and Two Brother's; -both aspiring; possibly both titled: While I should only have valued that in Either which is above Title, that which is truly noble in Both!

But by what a long-reaching felfishness is my Brother governed! By what remote, exceedingly remote views! Views, which it is in the power of the flightest accident, of a fever, for instance (the seeds of which are always vegetating, as I may fay, and ready to burft forth, in his own impetuous temper) or of the provoked weapon of an adversary, to blow up and deftroy!

I will break off here. Let me write ever so freely of my friends, I am fure of your kind construction: And I confide in your discretion, that you will avoid reading to or transcribing for others, such passages as may have the appearance of treating too freely the Parental, or even the Fraternal character, or induce others to censure for a supposed failure in duty to the one, or decency to the other,

Your truly affectionate,

-average of all daments of several order large in the figure of the large in the figure of the large of the l

CL. HARLOWE.

am

day

ion

ıch

uld

er-

ave

my

ro-

e I

ove

ro-

ote

eft

ch

to

nd

ely

n:

oid

as

he

he

LETTER XIV

Miss CLARISSA HARLOWE, To Miss Howe.

ON Hannah's depositing my long Letter (begun yesterday, but by reason of several interruptions not finished till within this hour) she found and brought me yours of this day. I thank you, my dear, for this kind expedition. These few lines will perhaps be time enough deposited, to be taken away by your servant with the other Letter: Yet they are only to thank you, and to tell you my increasing apprehensions.

I must take or seek the occasion to apply to my Mother for her mediation; for I am in danger of having a day fixed, and antipathy taken for bashfulness.—Should not Sisters be Sisters to each other? Should they not make a common cause of it, as I may say, a cause of Sex, on such occasions as the present? Yet mine, in support of my Brother's self-ishness, and no doubt, in concert with him, has been urging in full assembly it seems (and that with an earnestness peculiar to herself when she sets upon any-thing) than an absolute day be given me; and if I comply not, to be told, that it shall be to the forfeiture of all my Fortunes, and of all their Love.

She need not be so officious: My Brother's interest, without hers, is strong enough; for he has sound means to consederate all the samily against me. Upon some fresh provocation, or new intelligence concerning Mr. Lovelace (I know not what it is) they have bound themselves, or are to bind themselves, by a signed paper, to one another [The Lord bless me, my dear, what shall I do!] to carry their point in savour of Mr. Solmes, in support of my Father's Authority, as it is called, and against Mr. Lovelace, as a Libertine, and an enemy to the samily: And if so, I am sure, I may say against me.—How impolitic in them all, to join two people in one Interest, whom they wish for ever to keep afunder!

What the discharged Steward reported of him is furely bad enough: What Mrs. Fortescue faid, not only confirms that bad, but gives room to think him Mill worfe :- And yet the fomething further which my friends have come at, is of fo heinous a nature (as Betty Barnes tells Hannah) that it proves him to be the worlt of men. - But, hang the man, I had almost faid-What is he to me? What would he be-were not this Mr. Sol - O my dear, how I have the man in the light he is proposed to me!

All of them at the same time are afraid of Mt. Lovelace; yet not afraid to provoke him !- How am I entangled !- to be obliged to go on corresponding with him for their fakes-Heaven forbid, that their perfitted-in violence should so drive me, as to make it necessary for my own!

But furely they will yield-Indeed I cannot.

I believe the gentlest spirits when provoked (cause-Tefly and cruelly provoked) are the most determined. The reason may be, That not taking up resolutions lightly-their very deliberation makes them the more immoveable.—And then when a point is clear and felf-evident, how can one with patience think of entering into an argument or contention upon it?

An interruption obliges me to conclude myfelf, in some hurry, as well as fright, what I must ever be,

Yours more than my own,

CLARISSA HARLOWE.

LETTER XV.

Miss Howe, To Miss CLARISSA HARLOWE.

Friday, March 3.

HAVE both your Letters at once. It is very unhappy, my dear, fince your friends will have you marry, that a person of your merit should be addreffed

WOI defe why nea hap

dreft

have

1 tha for ang

the

to but fen the to Syr

efle tur ref in ab

mı ma ing my 15

pu W for on ren no LET. 15.

L. I.

a for m is not him

my

(as

o be vere

man

Mt.

am

ing

reir

eit

ife-

ed.

ons

ore

en-

34

.

12

ry

ive

ed

in e, dreffed by a fuccession of worthless creatures, who

That these presumers appear not in this very unworthy light to some of your friends, is because their desects are not so striking to them as to others.—And why? shall I venture to tell you?—Because they are nearer their own standard—Modesty, after all, perhaps has a concern in it; for how should they think that a Niece or Sister of theirs [I will not go higher, for sear of incurring your displeasure] should be an angel? . angel

But where indeed is the man to be found (who has the least share of due diffidence) that dares to look up to Miss Clarifia Harlowe with hope, or with any-thing but wishes? Thus the bold and sorward, not being sensible of their defects, aspire; while the modesty of the really worthy fills them with too much reverence to permit them to explain themselves. Hence your Symmes's, your Byron's, your Mullins's, your Wyerley's (the best of the herd) and your Solmes's, in turn, invade you—Wretches that, looking upon the rest of your Family, need not despair of succeeding in an alliance with it—But, to you, what an inexcuse-able presumption!

Yet I am afraid all opposition will be in vain. You must, you will, I doubt, be facrificed to this odious man. I know your family. There will be no resisting such baits as he has thrown out. O, my dear, my beloved friend! and are such charming qualities, is such exalted merit, to be sunk in such a Marriage!—You must not, your Uncle tells my Mother, dispute their authority. AUTHORITY! what a full word is that in the mouth of a narrow-minded person, who happened to be born thirty Years before one!—Of your Uncles I speak; for as to the Parental authority, That ought to be sacred—But should hot Parents have redfor for what they do?

Wonder not, however, at your Bell's un-fisterly behaviour

1

L

(W ful

by

by

re

Si

m

m

Wi

th

m

W

po

it

pr

th

ex

ed

tiv

fid

yo

ta

th

uf

be gu

yo Si

Be

th

by

to

no

behaviour in this affair: I have a particular to add to the inducements your infolent Brother is governed by, which will account for all her driving. You have already owned, that her outward eye was from the first struck with the figure and address of the man whom she pretends to despise, and who, 'tis certain, thoroughly despises her: But you have not told me, that still the loves him of all men. Bell has a mean. ness in her very pride; that meanness rises with her pride; and goes hand in hand with it; and no one is so proud as Bell. She has owned her Love, her up. eafy days, and fleepless nights, and her revenge grafted upon her Love, to her favourite Betty Barnes-To lay herfelf in the power of a servant's tongue! Poor creature !- But LIKE little Souls will find one another out, and mingle, as well as LIKE great ones. This however she told the wench in strict confidence: And thus, by way of the female round-about, as Love. lace had the sauciness on such another occasion, in ridicule of our Sex, to call it, Betty (pleased to be thought worthy of a secret, and to have an opportunity of inveighing against Lovelace's perfidy, as she would have it to be) told it to one of her confidants: That confidant, with like injunctions of secrecy, to Miss Lloyd's Harriot—Harriot to Miss Lloyd—Miss Lloyd to me—I to you—with leave to make what you please of it.

And now you will not wonder to find Miss Bell an implacable Rival, rather than an affectionate Sifter; and will be able to account for the words Witchcraft, Syren, and fuch-like, thrown out against you; and for her driving on for a fixed day for facrificing you to Solmes: In short, for her rudeness and violence of every kind.

What a sweet revenge will she take, as well upon Lovelace as upon you, if the can procure her rival Sifter to be married to the man that Sifter hates; and so prevent her having the man whom she herself loves (whether

2. [

dd to

d by,

have n the man

rtain,

me,

nean-

her ne is

r un-

afted

 $-T_0$

Poor

ano-

nes

nce:

ove-

, in

o be

por-

s she nts:

, to

Miss

vhat

lan

ter;

aft,

and

you

nce

pon

ival

and

ves

her

ferce

(whether she have hope of him or not) and whom she suspects her Sister loves?

Poisons and poinards have often been set to work by minds inflamed by disappointed Love, and actuated by Revenge—Will you wonder then, that the ties of relationship in such a case have no sorce, and that a Sifter forgets to be a Sifter?

Now I know this to be her fecret motive (the more grating to her, as her Pride is concerned to make her disavow it) and can consider it as joined with her former Envy, and as strengthened by a Brother, who has fuch an ascendant over the whole family; and whose Interest (flave to it as he always was) engaged him to ruin you with every one: Both possessed of the ears of all your family, and having it as much in their power as in their will to mifrepresent all you say, all you do; such subjects also as the Rencounter, and Lovelace's want of morals, to expatiate upon: Your whole family likewise avowedly attached to the odious man by means of the captivating proposals he has made them :- When I confider all these things, I am full of apprehensions for you.—O my dear, how will you be able to maintain your ground; - I am fure, (alas! I am too fure) that they will subdue such a fine spirit as yours, unused to opposition; and (Tell it not in Gath) you must be Mrs. Solmes!

Mean time, it is now easy, as you will observe, to guess from what quarter the report I mentioned to you in one of my former, came, That the younger Sister has robbed the elder of her Lover (a): For Betty whispered it, at the time she whispered the rest, that neither Lovelace nor you had done honourably by her young mistress—How cruel, my dear, in you, to rob the poor Bella of the only Lover she ever had!

At the instant too that she was priding herself, that now at last she should have it in her power not only (a) P. 3.

LE

tic

dor for

can

Mr wit

allo

tolo

tho:

oth

to t befo

hon par we 000 fayi

hen

hon

lord

fuel

Con

inde

to one

neit

1 pari

iect

I ar

·I

to gratify her own Susceptibilities, but to give an example to the Flirts of her Sex (a) (my worship's felf in her eye) how to govern their man with a filken rein, and without a kerb bridle!

Upon the whole, I have now no doubt of their persevering in favour of the despicable Solmes; and of their dependence upon the gentleness of your temper, and the regard you have for their favour, and for your own reputation. And now I am more than ever convinced of the propriety of the advice I formerly gave you, to keep in your own hands the Estate bequeathed to you by your Grandfather.—Had you done so, it would have procured you at least an outward respect from your Brother and Sister, which would have made them conceal the envy and ill-will that now are bursting upon you from hearts so narrow.

I must harp a little more upon this string—Do not you observe, how much your Brother's insluence has overtopped yours, since he has got into fortunes to considerable, and since you have given some of them an appetite to continue in themselves the possession of your Estate, unless you comply with their terms?

I know your dutiful, your laudable motives; and one would have thought, that you might have trufted to a Father who to dearly loved you. But had you been actually in possession of that Estate, and living up to it, and upon it (your youth protected from blighting tongues by the company of your prudent Norton, as you had proposed) do you think that your Brother, grudging it to you at the time as he did, and looking upon it as his right as an only Son, would have been practifing about it, and aiming at it? I told you some time ago, that I thought your trials but proportioned to your prudence (b): But you will be more than woman, if you can extricate yourself with honour, having such violent spirits and

(a) P. 8. (b) P. 3.

fordid

L. I.

an

up's

ken

heir

and

em-

for han

for-

the 101 eaft

ter.

and

arts

510

not

has 6 iem

n of

?

and fted

you

ing

om

ent

hat

he he

on,

out

But

ate

and

rdid fordid minds in some, and such tyrannical and despotic wills in others, to deal with. Indeed, all may be done, and the world be taught further to admire you for your blind duty and will-less resignation, if you can persuade yourself to be Mrs. Solmes.

I am pleafed with the instances you give me of Mr. Lovelace's benevolence to his own tenants, and with his little gift to your Uncle's. Mrs. Fortefcue allows him to be the best of Landlords: I might have told you That, had I thought it necessary to put you into some little conceit of him. He has qualities, in hort, that may make him a tolerable creature on the other fide of Fifty: But God help the poor woman to whose lot he shall fall till then! Women, I should fay, perhaps; fince he may break half a dozen hearts before that time.—But to the point I was upon—Shall we not have reason to commend the tenant's grateful honesty, if we are told, that with joy the poor man called out your Uncle; and on the fpot paid him in part of his debt those two guineas?—But what shall we say of that Landlord, who, tho' he knew the poor man to be quite deftitute, could take it; and, faying nothing while Mr. Lovelace staid, as foon as he was gone, tell of it in praise of the poor fellow's honesty -- Were this fo, and were not that Landlord related to my dearest friend, how should I despite fuch a wretch? -But perhaps the Story is aggravated. Covetous people have every-one's ill word: And fo indeed they ought; because they are only folicitous to keep that which they prefer to every-one's good one. Coverous indeed would they be who deferved neither, yet expected both!

I long for your next Letter. Continue to be as particular as possible. I can think of no other subject but what relates to you and to your affairs: For

I am, and ever will be, most affectionately,

Your own,

ANNA Howe.

LET

LE

m

IÍ

is

In

mi

pre

be

th

fel

tag

tai

w

W

lo

W

tr

do

an

gl

m

m

bi

N

m

bi

h

I

a

fa

H

LETTER XVI.

Miss CLARISSA HARLOWE, To Miss Howe.

[Her preceding not at that time received.]

Friday, March 3.

O MY dear friend, I have had a fad conflict! Trial upon trial; Conference upon conference!—But what Law, what Ceremony, can give a man a right to a heart which abhors him more than it does any living creature?

I hope my Mother will be able to prevail for me.— But I will recount all, tho' I fit up the whole night to do it; for I have a vast deal to write; and will be as minute as you wish me to be.

I concluded my last in a fright. It was occasioned by a conversation that passed between my Mother and my Aunt, part of which Hannah overheard. I need not give you the particulars; fince what I have to relate to you from different conversations that have passed between my Mother and me in the space of a very few Hours, will include them all. I will begin then.

I went down this morning when breakfast was ready with a very uneasy heart, from what Hannah had informed me of yesterday afternoon; wishing for an opportunity, however, to appeal to my Mother, in hopes to engage her interest in my behalf, and purposing to try to find one when she retired to her own apartment after breakfast: But, unluckily, there was the odious Solmes sitting asquat between my Mother and Sister, with so much assurance in his looks!—But you know, my dear, that those we love not, cannot do any-thing to please us.

Had the wretch kept his seat, it might have been well enough: But the bent and broad-shouldered creature must needs rise, and stalk towards a chair; which was just by that which was fet for me.

I removed

I removed it to a distance, as if to make way to my own: And down I sat, abruptly I believe; what I had heard all in my head.

But this was not enough to daunt him. The man is a very confident, he is a very bold, flaring man!—

Indeed, my dear, the man is very confident!

He took the removed chair, and drew it so near mine, squatting in it with his ugly weight, that he pressed upon my hoop.—I was so offended (all I had heard, as I said, in my head) that I removed to another chair. I own I had too little command of mysels. It gave my Brother and Sister too much advantage. I dare say they took it. But I did it involuntarily, I think. I could not help it.—I knew not what I did.

I faw that my Father was excessively displeased. When angry, no man's countenance ever shews it so much as my Father's. Clarissa Harlowe! said he with a big voice—and there he stopped.—Sir! said I, trembling and courtesying (for I bad not then sat down again): And put my chair nearer the wretch, and sat down—My sace, as I could feel, all in a glow.

3.

rial

-But

ight

any

e.- ight

ll be oned

and need

re.

nave

of a

egin

Was

nah

for

her,

pur-

nwc

was

ther

But

not een

ered

air;

wed

Make Tea, child, said my kind Mamma: Sit by me, Love; and make Tea.

I removed with pleasure to the seat the man had quitted; and being thus indulgently put into employment, soon recovered myself; and in the course of the breakfasting officiously asked two or three questions of Mr. Solmes, which I would not have done, but to make up with my Father.—Proud spirits may be brought to! whisperingly spoke my Sister to me, over her shoulder, with an air of triumph and scorn: But I did not mind her.

My Mother was all kindness and condescension. I asked her once, if she were pleased with the Tea? She said softly (and again called me dear) she was pleased with all I did. I was very proud of this encouraging goodness:

L

je

for

QV

Ðu

be fas

m bo

po

he

Cl

my

W

ing

my

la

ata

ma

Wil

and

me

H

put wet

to

hea

goodness: And all blew over, as I hoped, between my Father and me; for he also spoke kindly to me two or three times.

Small accidents these, my dear, to trouble you with; only as they lead to greater, as you shall hear.

Before the usual breakfast-time was over, my Father withdrew with my Mother, telling her he wanted to speak to her. Then my Sister and next my Aunt (who was with us) dropt away.

My Brother gave himself some airs of insult, which I understood well enough; but which Mr. Solmes could make nothing of: And at last he arose from his seat—Sister, said he, I have a curiosity to shew you. I will fetch it. And away he went shutting the door close after him.

I faw what all this was for. I arose; the man hemming up for a speech, rising, and beginning to set his splay-seet [Indeed, my dear, the man in all his ways is hateful to me] in an approaching posture.— I will save my Brother the trouble of bringing to me his curiosity, said I. I courtessed—Your servant, Sir—The man cried, Madam, Madam, twice, and looked like a sool.—But away I went—to find my Brother, to save my word—But my Brother, indisferent as the weather was, was gone to walk in the garden with my Sister. A plain case, that he had lest his curiosity with me, and designed to shew me no other.

I had but just got into my own apartment, and began to think of sending Hannah to began Audience of my Mother (the more encouraged by her condescending goodness at Breakfast) when Shorey her woman brought me her commands to attend her in her closet.

My Father, Hannah told me, was just gone out of it with a positive angry countenance. Then I as much dreaded the audience as I had wished for it before.

I went

. I.

een

me

you

ear.

Fa-

nted

unt

nich

mes

rom

new

ing

nan

fet.

his

.-

me

Sir

and

my

dif-

the left

no

and nce

de-

her

in

out

as

it

ent

I went down however; but, apprehending the fubject the intended to talk to me upon, approached her trembling, and my heart in visible palpitations.

She faw my concern. Holding out her kind arms, as the fat, Come kifs me, my dear, faid the, with a smile like a sun-beam breaking through the cloud that overshadowed her naturally benign aspect. Why flutters my jewel so?

This preparative sweetness, with her goodness just before, confirmed my apprehensions. My Mother saw the bitter pill wanted gilding.

O my Mamma! was all I could fay; and I clasped my arms round her neck, and my face sunk into her bosom.

My child! my child! restrain, said she, your powers of moving! I dare not else trust myself with you.—And my tears trickled down her bosom, as hers bedewed my neck.

O the words of kindness, all to be expressed in vain, that flowed from her lips!

Lift up your sweet face, my best child, my own Clarissa Harlowe!—O my daughter, best-beloved of my heart, lift up a face so ever amiable to me!— Why these sobs?—Is an apprehended duty so affecting a thing, that before I can speak—But I am glad, my Love, you can guess at what I have to say to you. I am spared the pains of breaking to you what was a task upon me reluctantly enough undertaken to break

Then rising, she drew a chair near her own, and made me fit down by her, overwhelmed as I was with tears of apprehension of what she had to say, and of gratitude for her truly maternal goodness to me—Sobs still my only language.

And drawing her chair still nearer to mine, she put her arms round my neck, and my glowing cheek wet with my tears, close to her own: Let me talk to you, my child. Since Silence is your choice, hearken to me, and be silent. You

L

of

m

yo

vil

Bu

of

an

Ic

of

fur

arn

my (ce

Ib

bor

mo fou

Ble

ver

den

fole

for hou

thin

I

lean

OWI

grea

VI

par

Am

indu

com

S

You know, my dear, what I every day forego, and undergo, for the fake of peace. Your Papa is a very good man, and means well; but he will not be controuled; nor yet persuaded. You have sometimes feemed to pity me, that I am obliged to give up every point. Poor man! his reputation the less for it; mine the greater: Yet would I not have this credit, if I could help it, at so dear a rate to him and to myfelf. You are a dutiful, a prudent, and a wife child, the was pleafed to fay, in hope, no doubt, to make me fo: You would not add, I am fure, to my trouble: You would not wilfully break that peace which costs your Mother so much to preserve. Obedience is better than sacrifice. O my Clary Harlowe, rejoice my heart, by telling me I have apprehended too much! -I fee your concern! I fee your perplexity! I fee your conflict [loofing her arm, and rifing, not willing I should see how much she herself was affected]. I will leave you a moment.—Answer me not-[For I was eslaying to speak, and had, as soon as she took her dear cheek from mine, dropt down on my knees, my hands clasped, and lifted up in a supplicating manner]. I am not prepared for your irrefistible expostulation, the was pleased to say. I will leave you to recollection: And I charge you, on my bleffing, that all this my truly maternal tenderness be not thrown away upon you.

And then she withdrew into the next apartment; wiping her eyes as she went from me; as mine over-flowed; my heart taking in the whole compass of her meaning.

She foon returned, having recovered more steadi-

Still on my knees, I had thrown my face across the chair she had fat in.

Look up to me, my Clary Harlowe-No fullenness, I hope!

No, indeed, my ever-to-be-revered Mamma.— And I arose. I bent my knee. She .. I.

and

ery

on-

nes

tor

re-

l to

ild,

me le:

ofts

e is

pice

ch!

fee

ing

I

or I ook

ees,

Au-

to

hat

nwo

nt;

ver-

her

adi-

the

len-

a.-

She

She raised me. No kneeling to me, but with knees of duty and compliance. Your heart, not your knees, must bend. It is absolutely determined—Prepare yourself therefore to receive your Father, when he visits you by-and-by, as he would wish to receive you. But on this one quarter of an hour depends the peace of my future life, the satisfaction of all the family, and your own security from a man of violence: And I charge you besides, on my blessing, that you think of being Mrs. Solmes.

There went the dagger to my heart, and down I funk: And when I recovered, found myself in the arms of my Hannah, my Sister's Betty holding open my reluctantly-opened palm, my laces cut, my linen scented with hartshorn; and my Mother gone. Had I been less kindly treated, the hated name still forborne to be mentioned, or mentioned with a little more preparation and reserve, I had stood the horrid sound with less visible emotion—But to be bid, on the Blessing of a Mother so dearly beloved, so truly reverenced, to think of being Mrs. Solmes—what a Shorey came in with a meffage (delivered in her solemn way); Your Mamma, Miss, is concerned for your disorder: She expects you down again in an hour; and bid me say, that she then hopes everything from your duty.

denunciation was that!

I made no reply; for what could I fay? And leaning upon my Hannah's arm, withdrew to my own apartment. There you will guess how the greatest part of the hour was employed.

Within that time, my Mother came up to me.

I love, she was pleased to say, to come into this apartment!—No emotions, child! No flutters!—Am I not your Mother!—Am I not your fond, your indulgent Mother!—Do not discompose me by discomposing yourself! Do not occasion me uneasiness, Vol. 1.

ai

y

m

25 th

de

be

de

th

to

M

no

no

fu

dì

ple

yo up

my

ter

un

the

VOL

hig

the

imp

arg

elfe gen

but

you

F

when I would give you nothing but pleasure. Come, my dear, we will go into your closet.

She took my hand, led the way, and made me fit down by her: And after the had enquired how I did. the began in a strain as if the had supposed I had made use of the intervening space to overcome all my objections, a to lo noifeathtal ed , ell o wint

She was pleased to tell me, that my Father and she, in order to spare my natural modesty, had taken the whole affair upon themselves-

Hear me out; and then speak; for I was going to expostulate. You are no stranger to the end of Mr. Solmes's vifits - 19 12 vin sannell vin to in

O Madam !- van talse boasgo-vitrafielet va

Hear me out; and then speak.—He is not indeed every-thing I with him to be: But he is a man of probity, and has no vices-

No vices, Madam !-

Hear me out, child-You have not behaved much amifs to him: We have feen with pleasure that you O Madam, must I not now speak!

I shall have done presently—A young creature of your virtuous and pious turn, the was pleased to fay, cannot furely love a profligate: You love your Brother too well, to wish to marry one who had like to have killed him, and who threatened your Uncles, and defies as all, You have had your own way Six or Seven times: We want to secure you against a man fo vile. Tell me (I have a right to know) whether you prefer this man to all others? - Yet God forbid that I should know you do! for such a declaration would make us all miserable. Yet tell me, are your affections engaged to this man?

I knew what the inference would be, if I had faid they were not logmostib son oll- 1 tentoM suspluit

You helitate-You answer me not-You cannot answet answer me. - Rising-Never more will I look upon you with an eye of favour-

me,

e fit

did,

nade

my

fhe,

the

g to deed

an of nuch

you

nen

re of

Broke to

cles,

y Six

man

ether

orbid

ation

your

faid

nnot

O Madam, Madam! Kill me not with your displeasure—I would not, I need not, hesitate one mement, did I not dread the inference, if I answer you as you wish.—Yet be that inference what it will, your threatened displeasure will make me speak. And I declare to you, that I know not my own heart, if it be not absolutely free. And pray, let me ask my dearest Mamma, in what has my conduct been faulty, that, like a giddy creature, I must be forced to marry, to save me from—From what? Let me beseech you, Madam, to be the guardian of my reputation—Let not your Clarissa be precipitated into a State she wishes not to enter into with any man! And this upon a supposition that otherwise she shall marry herself, and disgrace her whole family.

Well then, Clary [passing over the force of my plea] if your heart be free-

O my beloved Mamma, let the usual generosity of your dear heart operate in my favour. Urge not upon me the inference that made me hefitate.

I won't be interrupted, Clary—You have feen in my behaviour to you, on this occasion, a truly maternal tenderness; you have observed that I have undertaken this task with some reluctance, because the man is not every-thing; and because I know you carry your notions of perfection in a man too high—

Dearest Madam, this one time excuse me!—Isthere then any danger that I should be guilty of an imprudent thing for the man's sake you hint at?

Again interrupted!—Am I to be questioned, and argued with? You know this won't do somewhere else. You know it won't. What reason then, ungenerous girl, can you have for arguing with me thus, but because you think from my indulgence to you, you may?

F 2

What

¥

m

W

to

po

up

kn

th

wa

to

ou

for

to

my

IW

tol

hea

to (

difc

fay

it w vou

But

and

S

V

Y

What can I fay? What can I do? What must that cause be that will not bear being argued upon?

Again! Clary Harlowe!

Dearest Madam, forgive me: It was always my pride and my pleasure to obey you. But look upon that man—see but the disagreeableness of his person—

Now, Clary, do I see whose person you have in your eye!—Now is Mr. Solmes, I see, but comparatively disagreeable; disagreeable only as another man has a much more specious person.

But, Madam, are not his manners equally so?— Is not his person the true representative of his mind?—That other man is not, shall not be, any thing to me, release me but from this one man, whom my heart, unbidden, refifts.

Condition thus with your Father. Will he bear, do you think, to be thus dialogued with? Have I not conjured you, as you value my peace—What is it that I do not give up?—This very task, because I apprehended you would not be easily persuaded, is a task indeed upon me. And will you give up nothing? Have you not refused as many as have been offered to you? If you would not have us guess for whom, comply; for comply you must, or be looked upon as in a state of desiance with your whole family.

And faying this, she arose, and went from mc. But at the chamber-door stopt; and turned back: I will not say below in what a disposition I leave you. Consider of every-thing. The matter is resolved upon. As you value your Father's Blessing and mine, and the satisfaction of all the samily, resolve to comply. I will leave you for a few moments. I will come up to you again. See that I find you as I wish to find you; and since your beart is free, let your duty govern it.

30 1 17

In about half an hour, my Mother returned. She found me in tears. She took my hand: It is my part evermore, faid she, to be of the acknowledging fide.

fide. I believe I have needlesly exposed myself to your opposition, by the method I have taken with you. I first began as if I expected a denial, and by my indulgence brought it upon myself.

Do not, my dearest Mamma! do not, fay fo!

Were the occasion for this debate, proceeded she, to have risen from myself; were it in my power to dispense with your compliance; you too well know what you can do with me.

Would any body, my dear Miss Howe, wish to marry, who sees a Wife of such a temper, and blessed with such an understanding as my Mother is noted for, not only deprived of all power; but obliged to be even active in bringing to bear points of high importance, which she thinks ought not to be insisted.

upon?

u

17

on

in

a-

an

d?

to

ny

ar, e I

t is

e I

S 2

g?

red

om,

as as

mc.

ou.

ved

omwill

with

lout

She

my side.

When I came to you a fecond time, proceeded the knowing that your opposition would avail you no thing, I refused to hear your reasons: And in this I was wrong too, because a young creature who loves to reason, and used to love to be convinced by reason, ought to have all her objections heard: I now therefore, this third time, fee you; and am come refolved to hear all you have to fay: And let me, my dear, by my patience engage your gratitude; your generosity, I will call it; because it is to You I speak, who used to have a mind wholly generous.—Let me, if your heart be really free, let me see what it will induce you to do to oblige me: And fo as your permit your usual discretion to govern you, I will hear all you have to fay; but with this intimation, that fay what you will's it will be of no avail elfewhere.

What a dreadful faying is that! But could I engage.

your pity, Madam, it would be somewhat.

You have as much of my Pity, as of my Love. But what is person, Clary, with one of your prudence, and your heart disengaged?

Should the eye be disgusted, when the heart is to be engaged?—O Madam, who can think of marrying when the heart is shocked at the first appearance, and where the disgust must be confirmed by every conversation afterwards?

This, Clary, is owing to your prepossession. Let me not have cause to regret that noble firmness of mind in so young a creature which I thought your glory, and which was my boast in your character. In this instance it would be obstinacy, and want of duty.—Have you not made objections to several—

That was to their minds, to their principles, Madam .- But this man-

Is an honest man, Clary Harlowe. He has a good mind. He is a virtuous man.

He an honest man? His a good mind, Madam?

No-body denies him these qualities.

Can be be an honest man who offers terms that will rob all his own Relations of their just expectations—Can bis mind be good—

You, Clary Harlowe, for whose sake he offers so much, are the last person that should make this obfervation.

Give me leave to say, Madam, that a person preferring happiness to fortune, as I do; that want not even what I have, and can give up the use of that, as an inflance of duty-

No more, no more of your merits!—You know you will be a gainer by that chearful instance of your duty; not a loser. You know you have but cast your bread upon the waters—So no more of that!— For it is not understood as a merit by every-body, I assure you; tho' I think it a high one; and so did your Father and Uncles at the time—

Brother and Sister, who are afraid that the favour I was fo lately in-

I hear nothing against your Brother and Sister-What vie ver wh let

LI

W

Ih

fur has his thr gou

1

con dec be t

a lo

V

me. and mad with Con

let i O m

fent

be o

What family-feuds have I in prospect, at a time when I hoped most comfort from you all?

God bless my Brother and Sifter in all their worthy views! You shall have no family-feuds, if I can prevent them. You yourfelf, Madam, shall tell me what I shall bear from them, and I will bear it: But let my actions, not their mifrepresentations (as I am fure by the difgraceful prohibitions I have met with has been the case) speak for me.

Just then, up came my Father, with a sternness in his looks that made me tremble.—He took two or three turns about my chamber, tho' pained by his gout.—And then faid to my Mother, who was filent

as foon as the faw him-

My dear, you are long absent .- Dinner is near ready. What you had to fay, lay in a very little compass. Surely, you have nothing to do but to declare your will, and my will—But perhaps you may be talking of the preparations—Let us have you foon down-Your Daughter in your hand, if worthy of the name.

And down he went, casting his eye upon me with a look fo stern, that I was unable to fay one word to him, or even for a few minutes to my Mother.

Was not this very intimidating, my dear?

My Mother, feeing my concern, seemed to pity me. She called me her good child, and kissed me; and told me that my Father should not know I had made fuch opposition. He has kindly furnished us with an excuse for being so long together, said she.-Come, my dear-Dinner will be upon table prefently-Shall we go down?-And took my hand.

This made me start: What, Madam, go down to let it be supposed we were talking of preparations! O my beloved Mamma, command me not down upon such a supposition.

You fee, child, that to flay longer together, will be owning that you are debating about an absolute

FA

duty;

my

1.

ng

nd

er-

Let

of nuc

er.

of

Ia-

boo

mi

vill

eac

fo

ob-

re-

not , 28

WO

QUI

calt

-

, 1

did

ri

hat

n

tl

m

W

m

le

h

at

m

W

to

te

by

tre

ng

m

a

Ca

lie

the

yo

77200 duty: And that will not be borne. Did not your Father himself some days ago tell you, he would be obeyed? I will a third time leave you. I must say something by way of excuse for you: And that you defire not to go down to dinner—That your modesty on the occasion—

O Madam! fay not my modesty on fuch an occafion: For that will be to give hope-

And defign you not to give hope?—Perverse girl!

—Rising, and stinging from me; Take more time for consideration!—Since it is necessary, take more time—And when I see you next, let me know what blame I have to cast upon myself, or to bear from your Father, for my indulgence to you.

door; and seemed to expect that I would have befought her to make the gentlest construction for me; for, hesitating, she was pleased to say, I suppose you would not have me make a report-

O Madam, interrupted I, whose favour can I hope for, if I lose my Mamma's?

To have defired a favourable report, you know, my dear, would have been qualifying upon a point that I was too much determined upon, to give room for any of my friends to think I have the least hesitation about it. And so my Mother went down stairs.

I will deposit thus far; and, as I know you will not think me too minute in my relation of particulars so very interesting to one you honour with your Love, proceed in the same way. As matters stand, I don't care to have papers so freely written about me.

Pray let Robert call every day, if you can spare him, whether I have any thing ready or not.

I should be glad you would not send him emptyhanded. What a generosity will it be in you, to write as frequently from friendship, as I am sorced to do from missortune! The Letters being taken away will be an assurance that you have them. As I shall write

and

and deposit as I have opportunity, the formality of super and sub-scription will be excused. For I need not say how much I am,

Your sincere and ever-affectionate, CL. HARLOWE.

LETTER XVII,

Miss CLARISSA HARLOWE, To Miss Howe.

MY Mother, on her return, which was as soon as she had dined, was pleased to inform me, that she told my Father, on his questioning her about my chearful compliance (for it seems, the chearful was all that was doubted) that she was willing, on so material a point, to give a child whom she had so much reason to lave (as she condescended to acknowledge were her words) liberty to say all that was in her heart to say, that her compliance might be the freer: Letting him know, that when he came up, she was attending to my pleas; for that she found I had rather not marry at all.

She told me, that to this my Father angrily said, Let her take care—Let her take care—that she give me not ground to suspect her of a preference somewhere else. But, if it be to ease her heart, and not to dispute my will, you may hear her out.

So, Clary, said my Mother, I am returned in a temper accordingly: And I hope you will not again, by your peremptoriness, shew me, how I ought to treat you.

Indeed, Madam, you did me justice, to say, I have no inclination to marry at all. I have not, I hope, made myself so very unuseful in my Papa's family, as—

No more of your merits, Clary! You have been a good child. You have eased me of all the family-cares: But do not now give more than ever you relieved me from. You have been amply repaid in the reputation your skill and management have given you: But now there is soon to be a period to all

F 5

thofe

him,

4. I.

nour

be

fay

you

lefty

cca-

girl!

time

ame

Faber-

ught

for,

ould

ope

low,

oint

oom

fita.

ITS.

Will

ulars

ove,

on't

pty-

o do will write

L

10

90

fa

til

yo

ch

do

yo

ria

pr

th

11 m

W

m

it

m

an du

m

W

those assistances from you. If you marry, there will be a natural, and, if to please us, a desirable period; because your own family will employ all your talents in that way: If you do not, there will be a period likewise, but not a natural one—You understand me, child.

I wept.

I have made enquiry already after a housekeeper. I would have had your good Norton; but I suppose you will yourself wish to have the worthy woman with you. If you desire it, that shall be agreed upon for you.

But, why, dearest Madam, why am I, the youngest, to be precipitated into a State, that I am very far from wishing to enter into with any-body?

You are going to question me, I suppose, why your Sister is not thought of for Mr. Solmes?

I hope Madam it will not displease your

I hope, Madam, it will not displease you, if I were?

I might refer you for an answer to your Father.— Mr. Solmes has reasons for preferring you—

And I have reasons, Madam, for disliking him.

And why am I-

This quickness upon me, interrupted my Mother, is not to be borne! I am gone, and your Father comes, if I can do no good with you.

O Madam, I would rather die, than-

She put her hand to my mouth.—No peremptorines, Clary Harlowe: Once you declare yourself inflexible, I have done.

I wept for vexation. This is all, all, my Brother's doings-His grasping views-

No reflections upon your Brother: He has entirely the honour of the family at heart.

I would no more dishonour my family, Madam, than my Brother would.

I believe it: But I hope you will allow your Father, and Me, and your Uncles, to judge what will do it honour, what dishonour.

I.

11

1;

ts

bc

e, r.

fe

an n

A,

ar

ny

n.

r,

er

1-

1-'3

ly

n,

er,

it

I then offered to live fingle; never to marry at all; or never but with their full approbation.

If you mean to shew your dury, and your obedience, Clary, you must shew it in our way, not in your own.

I hope, Madam, that I have not so behaved hitherto, as to render such a trial of my obedience neces-

Yes, Clary, I cannot but say that you have hitherto behaved extremely well: But you have had no trials till now: And I hope, that now you are called to one, you will not fail in it. Parents, proceeded she, when children are young, are pleased with every-thing they do. You have been a good child upon the whole: But we have hitherto rather complied with you, than you with us. Now that you are grown up to marriageable years, is the test; especially as your Grandfather has made you independent, as we may say, in preserence to those who had prior expectations upon that Estate.

Madam, my Grandfather knew, and expressly mentioned in his Will his desire, that my Father will more than make it up to my Sister. I did nothing but what I thought my duty to procure his favour. It was rather a mark of his affection, than any advantage to me: For, do I either seek or wish to be independent? Were I to be Queen of the Universe, that dignity should not absolve me from my duty to You and to my Father. I would kneel for your blessings, were it in the presence of millions—So that—I am loth to interrupt you, Clary; tho' you could more than once break in upon me. You are young and unbroken: But, with all this oftentation of your duty, I defire you to shew a little more deference to me when I am speaking.

I beg your pardon, dear Madam, and your patience with me on fuch an occasion as this. If I did not speak with earnestness upon it, I should be supposed to have F 6

L

tre

th

to

an

the

in

be tif

oth

the

the inf

tha

bea

ha

fo,

and

ago

W

in

wil

to rity

Yo

he

car

the

alo

bec

the full

wa

Bro

only maidenly objections against a man I never can endure.

Clary Harlowe!-

Dearest, dearest Madam, permit me to speak what I have to say, this once—It is hard, it is very hard, to be forbidden to enter into the cause of all these misunderstandings, because I must not speak disrespectfully of one who supposes me in the way of his ambition, and treats me like a slave—

Whither, whither, Clary-

My dearest Mamma!—My duty will not permit me so far to suppose my Father arbitrary, as to make a plea of that arbitrariness to you—

How now, Clary !- O girl !-

Your patience, my dearest Mamma:—You were pleased to say, you would hear me with patience.— Person in a man is nothing, because I am supposed to be prudent: So my eye is to be disgusted, and my reason not convinced—

Girl, girl!

Thus are my imputed good qualities to be made my punishment; and I am to be wedded to a monster—

[Astonishing!—Can this, Clarif'a, be from you? The man, Madam, person and mind, is a monster in my eye.]—And that I may be induced to bear this treatment, I am to be complimented with being indifferent to all men: Yet, at other times, and to serve other purposes, be thought preposessed in favour of a man against whose moral character lie just objections.—Confined, as if, like the giddiest of creatures, I would run away with this man, and disgrace my whole family!—O my dearest Mamma! who can be patient under such treatment?

Now, Clary, I suppose you will allow me to speak. I think I have had patience indeed with you.—Could I have thought—But I will put all upon a short issue. Your Mother, Clarissa, shall shew you an example of that patience you so boldly claim from her, without having any yourself.

I.

ın

at

d,

(e e-

is nit

ke

re

ed

ny

ny

ter

his

nve

fa

ns. 1

ole

ent

k.

1 b ie. of

ut

0

O my dear, how my Mother's condescension distreffed me at the time !- Infinitely more distressed me, than rigour couly have done. But the knew, the was to be fure aware, that the was put upon a harth, upon an unreasonable service, let me say, or she would not, the could not, have had fo much patience with me.

Let me tell you then, proceeded she, that all lies in a small compass, as your Father said.—You have been hitherto, as you are pretty ready to plead, a dutiful child. You have indeed had no cause to be otherwise. No child was ever more favoured. Whether you will discredit all your past behaviour; when ther, at a time and upon an occasion, that the highest instance of duty is expected from you (an instance that is to crown all); and when you declare that your heart is free-you will give that instance; or whether, having a view to the independence you may claim (for fo, Clary, whatever be your motive, it will be judged) and which any man you favour, can affert for you against us all; or rather for himself in spite of us-Whether, I fay, you will break with us all; and fland in defiance of a jealous Father, needlesty jealous, I will venture to fay, of the prerogatives of his Sex, as to me, and still ten times more jealous of the authority of a Father; - This is now the point with us. You know your Father has made it a point; and did he ever give up one he thought he had a right to

Too true, thought I to myself! And now my Brother has engaged my Father, his fine scheme will walk alone, without needing his leading-strings; and it is become my Eather's will that I oppose; not my Brother's grafping views.

I was filent. To fay the truth, I was just then fullenly filent. My heart was too big. I thought it was hard to be thus given up by my Mother; and that the should make a will to uncontroulable as my Brother's, her will.-My Mother, my dear, tho' I

LE

you

ma

app

Fat

rou

Bro

by I

that pofa

feve

ion

ceed

cou

end

tion rein

cles

You

upo

thor

fure

fam

Fatl

are and

dear

it ca

I afl

com all,

the :

lutie

And

gel,

must not say so, was not obliged to marry against her liking. My Mother loved my Father.

My filence availed me still less.

Now, my good child, Now, my Clary, do I love you! It shall not be known, that you have argued with me at all. All shall be imputed to that modesty which has ever so much distinguished you. You shall have the full merit of your resignation.

of I wept. 1 09 and below

She tenderly wiped the tears from my eyes, and kissed my cheek—Your Father expects you down with a chearful countenance—But I will excuse your going. All your scruples, you see, have met with an indulgence truly maternal from me. I rejoice in the hope that you are convinced. This indeed seems to be a proof of the truth of your agreeable declaration, That your heart is free.

Did not this feem to border upon cruelty, my dear, in so indulgent a Mother?—It would be wicked [Would it not!] to suppose my Mother capable of Art—But she is put upon it; and obliged to take methods to which her heart is naturally above stooping; and all intended for my good, because she sees that no arguing will be admitted any where elfe!

I will go down, proceeded she, and excuse your attendance at afternoon-tea, as I did to dinner: For I know you will have some little reluctances to subdue. I will allow you those; and also some little natural shynesses—And so you shall not come down, if you chuse not to come down—Only, my dear, do not disgrace my report when you come to supper. And be sure behave as you used to do to your Brother and Sister; for your behaviour to them will be one test of your chearful obedience to us. I advise as a Friend, you see, rather than command as a Mother—So adieu, my Love. And again she kissed me, and was going. O my dear mamma, said I, forgive me!—But surely

you

you cannot believe, I can ever think of having that She was very angry, and seemed to be greatly disappointed. She threatened to turn me over to my Father and my Uncles:—She however bid me (generously bid me) consider, what a handle I gave to my Brother and Sister, if I thought they had views to serve by making my Uncles diffatisfied with me.

I, faid the, in a milder accent, have early faid all that I thought could be faid against the present proposal, on a supposition, that you, who have resused several others (whom I own to be preferable as to perfon) would not approve of it; and could I have fucceeded, you, Clary, had never heard of it. But if I could not, how can you expect to prevail? My great ends, in the talk I have undertaken, are the preservation of the family-peace so likely to be overturned; to reinstate you in the affections of your Father and Uncles: and to preferve you from a man of violence. Your Father, you must needs think will flame out. upon your refusal to comply: Your Uncles are so thoroughly convinced of the confiftency of the meafure with their favourite views of aggrandizing the family, that they are as much determined as your Father-Your Aunt Hervey and your Uncle Hervey are of the same party. And it is hard, if a Father and Mother, and Uncles, and Aunt, all conjoined, cannot be allowed to direct your choice-Surely, my dear girl, proceed the [for I was filent all this time] it cannot be, that you are the more averse, because thefamily views will be promoted by the match-This, I affure you, is what every-body must think, if you comply not. Nor, while the man so obnoxious to us all, remains unmarried, and buzzes about you, will the ftrongest affeverations you can make of your resolution and wishes to live fingle, be in the least regarded. And well you know, that were Mr. Lovelace an angel, and your Father had made it a point that you should

ed.

I.

her

fty

ith goan the ear, ked Art ods

and

on,

our or l

difd be and ft of

ieu, ing.

you

it

ol

th

N

fe

W

E

ti

or br

an

fo

cil

WC

fo-

an by me yo

itr

ha

ob

ear

kn

should not have him, it would be in vain to dispute his will. As to the prohibition laid upon you (much as I will own against my liking) that is owing to the belief that you corresponded by Miss Howe's means with that man; nor do I doubt that you did so.

I answered to every article, in such a manner, as I am sure would have satisfied her, could she have been permitted to judge for herself; and I then inveighed with bitterness against the disgraceful prohibitions laid upon me.

They would serve to shew me, she was pleased to say, how much in earnest my Father was. They might be taken off, whenever I thought sit, and no harm done, nor disgrace received. But if I were to be contumacious, I might thank myself for all that would follow.

I fighed. I wept. I was filent.

Shall I, Clary, said she, shall I tell your Father that these prohibitions are as unnecessary as I hoped they would be? That you know your duty, and will not offer to controvert his will? What say you, my Love?

O Madam, what can I say to questions so indulgently put?—I do indeed know my duty: No creature in the world is more willing to practise it: But, pardon me, dearest Madam, if I say, That I must bear these prohibitions, if I am to pay so dear to have them taken off.

Determined and perverse, my dear Mamma called me: And after walking twice or thrice in anger about the room, she turned to me;—Your heart free, Clarissa! How can you tell me your heart is free? Such extraordinary antipathies to a particular person must be owing to extraordinary prepossessions in another's favour!—Tell me, Clary; and tell me truly—Do you not continue to correspond with Mr. Lovelace?

Dearest Madam, replied I, you know my motives: To prevent mischief, I answered his Letters. The The reasons for our apprehensions of this fort are not over.

I own to you, Clary (altho' now I would not have it known) that lonce thought a little qualifying among such violent spirits was not amis. I did not know but all things would come round again by the mediation of Lord M. and his two Sisters: But as they all three think proper to resent for their Nephew; and as their Nephew thinks sit to defy us all; and as terms are offered on the other hand, that could not be asked, which will very probably prevent your Grandfather's Estate going out of the samily, and may be a means to bring it still greater into it; I see not, that the continuance of your correspondence with him either can or ought to be permitted. I therefore now forbid it to you, as you value my favour.

Be pleased, Madam, only to advise me how to break it off with safety to my Brother and Uncles; and it is all I wish for. Would to Heaven, the man so hated had not the pretence to make of having been too violently treated, when he meant peace and reconciliation! It would always have been in my own power to have broke with him. His reputed immoralities would have given me a just pretence at any time to do so—But, Madam, as my Uncles and my Brother will keep no measures; as he has heard what the view is; and as I have reason to think, that he is only restrained by his regard for me from resenting their violent treatment of him and his samily; what can I do? Would you have me, Madam, make him desperate?

The Law will protect us, child! Offended magistracy will assert itself-

But, Madam, may not some dreadful mischief first happen?—The Law afferts not itself, till it is offended.

You have made offers, Clary, if you might be obliged in the point in question—Are you really in earnest, were you to be complied with, to break off all correspondence with Mr. Lovelace?—Let me know this.

Indeed,

as I been

D. ...

pute

ruch

the eans

ghed

hey no re to that ther oped will

my

dulrea-But, bear

hem

Clauch nuft nuft

Do ce?

ers. The

T

ca ca

tre

m hi

· lit

« tif

in fr

· T

4 W

· W

· le

·U

m e ne

way

hav

fr.

· T

s th

s ei

ir.

· fa

5 th

· d ii ì

· P

· 9

6 fr

47

6 h

6 10

f t

Indeed I am; and I will. You, Madam, shall see all the Letters that have passed between us. You shall see I have given him no encouragement independent of my duty. And when you have seen them, you will be better able to direct me how, on the condition I have offered, to break entirely with him.

I take you at your word, Clarissa-Give me his Letters; and the Copies of yours.

I am fure, Madam, you will keep the knowledge that I write, and what I write—

No conditions with your Mother-Surely my prudence may be trufted to.

I begged her pardon; and befought her to take the key of the private drawer in my escritoire, where they lay, that the herself might see, that I had no reserves to my Mother.

She did; and took all his Letters, and the Copies of mine. Unconditioned with, the was pleased to fay, they shall be yours again, unseen by any body else.

I thanked her; and the withdrew to read them; faying, She would return them, when the had.

You, my dear, have feen all the Letters that passed between Mr. Lovelace and me, till my last return from you. You have acknowledged, that he has nothing to boast of from them. Three others I have received fince, by the private conveyance I told you of: The last I have not yet answered. I have not branen and

In these three, as in those you have seen, after having belought my savour, and, in the most earnest manner, professed the ardour of his passion for me; and set forth the indignities done him; the desiances my Brother throws out against him in all companies; the menaces, and hostile appearance of my Uncles wherever they go; and the methods they take to desame him; he declares, 'That neither his own honour, nor the honour of his samily (involved as that as in the undistinguishing resections cast upon him for an unhappy

L. ].

Il fee

hall

nt of

will

on I bis

dge

oru-

the

hey

rves

s of ay,

е.

m;

Ted.

om

ing

he he

V-

ın-

nd

ny

he

e-

ne-

10

he

npy

happy affair which we would have shunned, but could not) permit him to bear these confirmed indignities: That as my inclinations, if not favourable to hint, cannot be, nor are, to fuch a man as the newly-introduced Solmes, he is interested the more to resent my Brother's behaviour; who to every-body avows his rancour and malice; and glories in the probability he has, thro' the address of this Solmes, of mortifying me, and avenging himself on him: That it is impossible, he should not think himself concerned to frustrate a measure so directly levelled at him, had he not a still higher motive for hoping to frustrate it; That I must forgive him, if he enter into conference with Solmes upon it. He earnestly insists (upon what he has so often proposed) That I will give him leave, in company with Lord M. to wait upon my 'Uncles, and even upon my Father—And he promises patience, if new provocations, absolutely be-' neath a man to bear, be not given:' Which by the way I am far from being able to engage for.

In my answer, I absolutely declare, as I tell him I have often done, 'That he is to expect no favour from me, against the approbation of my friends: That I am fure their consents for his visiting any of them will never be obtained: That I will not be either so undutiful, or so indiscreet, as to suffer my 'interests to be separated from the interests of my family, for any man upon earth: That I do not think myself obliged to him for the forbearance I delire one flaming spirit to have with others: That in this defire I require nothing of him, but what Prudence, Justice, and the Laws of his Country require: That if he has any expectations of favour from me, on that account, he deceives himself; That I have no inclination, as I have often told him, to change my condition: That I cannot al-' low myself to correspond with him any longer in this clandestine manner: It is mean, low, unduti-

LET

doul

ence whe

the

that

to C now

you,

fo V

you.

fity

ment

the unre

hev brin

nior tion

bati

brok

as it

no p

VOU

corr uay

Yet.

You free

circ

as h

Wh

you

bly

٢Ĺ

ha ha

V

ful, I tell him; and has a giddy appearance, which cannot be excused: That therefore he is not to ex.

pect that I will continue it.'

To this, in his last, among other things, he replies, That if I am actually determined to break off all correspondence with him, he must conclude, that it is with a view to become the Wife of a man, whom ono woman of honour and fortune can think tolera-6 ble. And in that case, I must excuse him for say. ' ing, that he shall neither be able to bear the thoughts of losing for ever a person in whom all his present and all his future hopes are centred; nor support himself with patience under the insolent triumphs of my Brother upon it. But that nevertheless he will not threaten either his own life, or that of any other man. He must take his resolutions at such a dreaded event shall impel him, at the time. If he shall know that it will have my confent, he must endeavour to refign to his destiny: But if it be brought about by compulsion, he shall not be able to answer for the

I will fend you these Letters for your perusal in a few days. I would inclose them; but that it is posfible domething may happen, which may make my Mother require to re-perufe them-When you fee them, you will observe how he endeavours to hold me to this correspondence.

consequence.'

0 0 In about an hour my Mother returned. Take your Letters, Clary: I have nothing, she was pleased to say, to tax your discretion with, as to the wording of yours to him: You have even kept up a proper dignity, as well as observed all the rules of decorum; and you have refented, as you ought to refent, his menacing invectives. In a word, I fee not, that he can form the least expectations from what you have written, that you will encourage the passion he avows for you. But does he not avow his passion? Have you the least doubt doubt about what must be the issue of this correspondence, if continued? And do you yourself think, when you know the avowed hatred of one side, and the declared desiances of the other, that this can be, that it ought to be a match?

By no means it can, Madam; you will be pleafed to observe, that I have said as much to him. But now, Madam, that the whole correspondence is before you, I beg your commands what to do in a situation so very disagreeable.

. I.

lich

ex.

lies,

all

that mor

era-

Cay.

hts

fent

1100 sof

will ther

ded

WO

r to

t by

the n a

of-

my

fee

bla

nr

ay,

urs

29

ou

ng

rm

en,

ou.

aft

One thing I will tell you, Clary-But I charge you, as you would not have me question the generohey of your spirit, to take no advantage of it, either mentally or verbally; that I am so much pleased with the offer of your keys to me, made in so chearful and unreserved a manner, and in the prudence you have hewn in your Letters, that were it practicable to bring every one; or your Father only, into my opinion, I sould readily leave all the rest to your discretion, referving only to myself the direction or approbation of your future Letters; and to see, that you broke off the correspondence as soon as possible. as it is not, and as I know your Father would have no patience with you, should it be acknowledged that you correspond with Mr. Lovelace, or that you have corresponded with him fince the time he prohibited you so to do; I forbid you to continue such a liberty— Yet, as the case is difficult, let me ask you, What you yourself can propose? Your heart, you say, is free: You own, that you cannot think, as matters are circumstanced, that a match with a man fo obnoxious as he now is to us all, is proper to be thought of: What do you propose to do?-What, Clary, are your own thoughts of the matter?

Without hesitation thus I answered—What I humbly propose is this:—'That I will write to Mr. 'Lovelace (for I have not answered his last) that he has nothing to do between my Father and Me:

"That

L

ex

as .

fix

COL

the

mo

fool

fity

not

An

at a beh

Tha

lives

it is (fpe

ed:

ness

ofter

Mot

deliv

mor

inter

You

cur 1

even

to w

and a

of a

(1)

1

1

That I neither ask his advice, nor need it: But that fince he thinks he has some pretence for interfering, because of my Brother's avowal of the interest of Mr. Solmes in displeasure to him, I will assure him (without giving him any reason to impute the assurance to be in the least favourable to himself) that I never will be that man's.' And if, proceeded I, I may be permitted to give him this affurance; and Mr. Solmes, in confequence of it, be discouraged from prosecuting his address; let Mr. Lovelace be fatisfied or distaissied, I will go no farther; nor write another line to him; nor ever see him more, if I can avoid it: And I shall have a good excuse for it, without bring.

ing in any of my family.

Ah! my Love!—But what shall we do about the Terms Mr. Solmes offers? Those are the inducements with every-body. He has even given hopes to your Brother that he will make exchanges of Estates; or at least, that he will purchase the Northern one; for you know it must be entirely consistent with the family-views, that we encrease our interest in this Country. Your Brother, in short, has given in a plan that captivates us all: And a family so rich in all its branches, and that has its views to honour, must be pleased to see a very great probability of taking rank one day among the principal in the kingdom.

And for the sake of these views, for the sake of this plan of my Brother's, am I, Madam, to be given in Marriage to a Man I never can endure!—O my dear Mamma, save me, save me, if you can, from this heavy evil.—I had rather be buried alive, indeed I had, than have that man !

She chid me for my vehemence; but was so good as to tell me, That she would sound my Uncle Harlowe, who was then below; and if he encouraged her (or would engage to second her) she would venture to talk to my Father herself; and I should hear surther in the morning.

She

hat

ng,

of

nim

ffu-

at I

1, 1

Mr.

rom

fied

ther

it:

ng-

the

ents

7UOT

or at

for

fa-

this plan

1 its

t be ank

this

n in

dear

d I rood

Tar-

her e to

She

She went down to Tea, and kindly undertook to excuse my attendance at supper.

But is it not a fad thing, I repeat, to be obliged to fland in opposition to the will of such a Mother? Why, as I often say to myself, was such a man as this Solmes fixed upon? The only man in the world, surely, that could offer so much, and deserve so little!

Little indeed does he deserve!—Why, my dear, the man has the most indifferent of characters. Every mouth is opened against him for his sordid ways—A solish man, to be so base-minded!—When the difference between the obtaining of a same for genero-sity, and incurring the censure of being a miser, will not, prudently managed, cost Fifty pounds a year.

What a name have You got, at a less expence? And what an opportunity had he of obtaining credit at a very small one, succeeding such a wretched creature as Sir Oliver, in fortunes so vast?—Yet has he so behaved, that the common phrase is applied to him, That Sir Oliver will never be dead while Mr. Solmes lives.

The world, as I have often thought ill-natured as it is faid to be, is generally more just in characters (speaking by what it feels) than is usually apprehended: And those who complain most of its censoriousness, perhaps should look inwardly for the occasion oftener than they do.

My heart is a little at ease, on the hopes that my Mother will be able to procure favour for me, and a deliverance from this man; and so I have leisure to moralize. But if I had not, I should not forbear to intermingle occasionally these fort of remarks, because you command me never to omit them when they occur to my mind: And not to be able to make them, even in a more affecting situation, when one sits down to write, would shew one's self more engaged to self, and to one's own concerns, than attentive to the wishes of a friend. If it be said, that it is natural so to be, what

L

to

tin

tio

mo

10 at I

the

I

I

And

glass

wou

I

In

and,

for t in h confi

to ha

again

migh

ber.

Ic

Mo

Vo

The 1

O

IW

Te

It

what makes that nature, on occasions where a friend may be obliged, or reminded of a piece of instruction, which (writing down) one's self may be the better for, but a fault; which it would set a person above nature to subdue?

LETTER XVIII.

and sport I he only man in the words and

Miss CLARISSA HARLOWE, To Miss Howe.

- serve bibad and not men Sprage Sat. March 4.

W OULD you not have thought that something might have been obtained in my favour, from an offer so reasonable, from an expedient so proper, as I imagine, to put a tolerable end, as from myself, to a correspondence I hardly know how otherwise, with safety to some of my family, to get rid of?—But my Brother's plan (which my Mother spoke of, and of which I have in vain endeavoured to procure a copy, with a design to take it to pieces, and expose it, as I question not there is room to do) joined with my Father's impatience of contradiction, are irresistible.

I have not been in bed-all night; nor am I in the least drowfy. Expectation, and hope, and doubt (an uneasy state!) kept me sufficiently wakeful. I stept down at my usual time, that it might not be known I had not been in bed; and gave directions in the sa-mily-way.

About eight o'clock Shorey came to me from my Mother with orders to attend her in her chamber.

My Mother had been weeping, I saw by her eyes: But her aspect seemed to be less tender, and less asfectionate, than the day before; and this, as soon as I entered into her presence, struck me with an awe, which gave a great damp to my spirits.

Sit down, Clary Harlowe; I shall talk to you byand-by: And continued looking into a drawer among Laces and Linen, in a way neither busy nor unbusy.

. I believe it was a quarter of an hour before the fpoke

to

to me (my heart throbbing with the suspence all the time); and then she asked me coldly, What directions I had given for the day?

I shewed her the bill of fare for this day, and tomorrow, if, I said, it pleased her to approve of it.

She made a small alteration in it; but with an air so cold and so solemn, as added to my emotions.

Mr. Harlowe talks of dining out to-day, I think, at my Brother Antony's-

Mr. Harlowe!—Not my Father!—Have I not then a Father!—thought I?

Sit down when I bid you.

I fat down.

nd

n,

or,

2-don

ng

om

as

o a

ith

my

of

py,

as I

Fa-

the

(an ept

wn

fa-

my

JON

es:

af-

n as

we,

by-

ong

2 31

oke

to

You look very fullen, Clary.

I hope not, Madam.

If children would always be children—parents—

And there she stopt.

She then went to her toilette, and looked in the glass, and gave half a sigh—The other half, as if she would not have sighed could she have helped it, she gently hem'd away.

I don't love to fee the girl look fo fullen

Indeed, Madam, I am not fullen.—And I arose, and, turning from her, drew out my handerchief; for the tears ran down my cheeks.

I thought, by the glass before me, I saw the Mother in her softened eye cast towards me: But her words confirmed not the hoped-for tenderness.

One of the most provoking things in the world is, to have people cry for what they can help!

I wish to heaven I could, Madam !-And I sobbed

again.

Tears of penitence and fobs of perversences are mighty well suited!—You may go up to your chamber. I shall talk with you by-and-by.

I courtefied with reverence.

Mock me not with outward gestures of respect. The heart, Clary, is what I want.

Vo'L. I. G Indeed,

he

kn ha

my

it-

or

M

my

juff

ihe

fo

to

to a

not atte

in I

wor nev

to c

will

that

Iwi

are

With

Lov

Indeed, Madam, you have it. It is not so much mine as my Mamma's!

Fine talking!—As fomebody fays, If words were to pass for duty, Clarissa Harlowe would be the dutifulest child breathing.

God bless that somebody!—Be it whom it will, God bless that somebody!—And I courtefied, and pursuant to her last command, was going.

She seemed struck; but was to be angry with me. So turning from me, she spoke with quickness, Whither now, Clary Harlowe?

You commanded me, Madam, to go to my chamber.

I see you are very ready to go out of my presence.— Is your compliance the effect of sullenness, or obedience?-You are very ready to leave me.

I could hold no longer; but threw myself at her seet: O my dearest Mamma! Let me know all I am to suffer: Let me know what! am to be?—I will bear it, if I can bear it: But your displeasure I cannot bear!

Leave me, leave me, Clary Harlowe!—No kneeling!—Limbs fo supple; Will so stubborn!—Rise, I sell you.

I cannot rise! I will discbey my Mamma, when she bids me leave her without being reconciled to me! No sullens, my Mamma: No perversenes: But, worse than either: This is direct disobedience!—Yet tear not yourself from me! [wrapping my arms about her as I kneeled; she struggling to get from me; my face listed up to hers, with eyes running over, that spoke not my heart if they were not all humility and reverence] You must not, must not, tear yourself from me! [for still the dear Lady struggled, and looked this way and that, in a sweet disorder, as if she knew not what to do.]—I will never rise, nor leave you, nor let you go, till you say you are not angry with me.

O thou ever-moving child of my heart ! [folding

her

her dear arms about my neck, as mine embraced her knees] Why was this talk—But leave me!—You have discomposed me beyond expression! Leave me, my dear !- I won't be angry with you-if I can help it-if you'll be good.

I.

ch

ere

ti-

ill,

ind

ne.

fs,

m-

be-

her

am

vill

nel-, I

hen

ne!

orfe

tear

her ace

oke

ve-

rom

this

not

nor

le.

ing

her

I arose trembling, and hardly knowing what I did, or how I flood or walked, withdrew to my chamber. My Hannah followed me as foon as the heard me quit my Mother's presence, and with salts and spring-water just kept me from fainting; and that was as much as the could do. It was near two hours before I could so far recover myself as to take up my pen, to write to you how unhappily my hopes have ended,

My Mother went down to breakfast. I was not fit to appear: But if I had been better, I suppose I should not have been fent for; fince the permission for my attending her down, was given by my Father (when in my chamber) only on condition that the found me worthy of the name of Daughter. That, I doubt, I never shall be in his opinion, if he be not brought to change his mind as to this Mr. Solmes.

LETTER XIX.

Miss CLARISSA HARLOWE, To Miss Howe.

[In answer to Letter XV.]

Sat. March 4. 12 o'clock.

HANNAH has just now brought me from the usual place your favour of yesterday. The contents of it have made me very thoughtful; and you will have an answer in my gravest style.—I to have that Mr. Solmes!—No indeed!—I will sooner—But I will write first to those passages in your Letter which are less concerning, that I may touch upon this part with more patience.

As to what you mention of my Sifter's value for Mr. Levelace, I am not very much surprised at it. She takes

I

o

N

2

€1

in

be ag

tr

de

or

at

he

on

E

vif

Se

MC

an

fho

int

me

and

cel

An

If

ma

eve

IS a

wif

act

plea

rath

real

hav

10

takes such officious pains, and it is so much her subject, to have it thought that she never did, and never could like him, that she gives but too much room to suspect that she does. She never tells the story of their parting, and of her refusal of him, but her colour rises, she looks with distain upon me, and mingles anger with the airs she gives herself:—Anger as well as Airs, demonstrating, that she refused a man whom she thought worth accepting: Where else is the reason either for anger or boast?—Poor Bella! She is to be pitied—She cannot either like or dislike with temper!—Would to heaven she had been mistress of all her wishes!—Would to heaven she had!

As to what you say of my giving up to my Father's controul the Estate devised me, my motives at the time, as you acknowledge, were not blameable. Your advice to me on the subject was grounded, as I remember, on your good opinion of me; believing that I should not make a bad use of the power willed me: Neither you nor I, my dear, altho' you now assume the air of a diviner [Pardon me] could have believed That would have happened which has happened, as to my Father's part particularly. You were indeed fealous of my Brother's views against me; or rather of his predominant Love of himself; but I did not think so hardly of my Brother and Sister as you always did. You never loved them; and Ill-will has eyes ever open to the faulty fide; as Good-will or Love is blind even to real imperfections. I will briefly recollect my motives.

I found Jealousies and Uneasiness rising in every breast, where all before was Unity and Love: The honoured Testator was reslected upon: A second childhood was attributed to him; and I was censured, as having taken advantage of it. All young creatures, thought I, more or less, covet independency; but those who wish most for it, are seldom the fittest to be trusted either with the government of themselves,

I.

ber

to

of ıv

les

ell

m

22-

is

ith

of

er's

the

nuo

re-

hat

ne:

me

ved

as eed

her

not

al-

has

10 efly

very

The

ond

red,

res,

but

t to

VCS,

10

or with power over others. This is certainly a very high and unusual devise to so young a creature. We should not aim at all we have power to do. To take all that good-nature, or indulgence, or good opinion confers, shews a want of moderation, and a graspingness that is unworthy of that indulgence; and are bad indications of the use that may be made of the power bequeathed. It is true, thought I, that I have formed agreeable schemes of making others as happy as myfelf, by the proper discharge of the Stewardship entrusted to me [Are not all Estates Stewardships, my dear?]. But let me examine myself: Is not Vanity, or fecret Love of praise, a principal motive with me at the bottom?-Ought I not to suspect my own heart? If I fet up for myself, puffed up with every one's good opinion, may I not be left to myself?-Every one's eyes are upon the conduct, upon the visits, upon the visitors, of a young creature of our Sex, made independent: And are not such subjected, more than any others, to the attempts of Enterprisers and Fortune-seekers?—And then, left to myself, should I take a wrong step, tho' with ever so good an intention, how many should I have to triumph over me, how few to pity me!—The more of the one, and the fewer of the other, for having aimed at excelling.

These were some of my reflections at the time: And I have no doubt, but that in the same situation I should do the very same thing; and that upon the maturest deliberation. Who can command or foresee events? To act up to our best judgments at the time, is all we can do. If I have erred, 'tis to worldly wisdom only that I have erred. If we suffer by an act of duty, or even by an act of generosity, is it not pleasurable on resection, that the sault is in others, rather than in ourselves?—I had much rather have reason to think others unkind, than that they should have any to think me undutiful.

G 3

And

L

w

of

in

Vi

pu

my life

de

LIE

the

wh

ion

Pri

wh

the

Th

vie

end

Sta

fua

and

kno

may

the

yiel

stut

upo

be)

with

who

And fo, my dear, I am fure had you.

And now for the most concerning part of your Letter.

You think I must of necessity, as matters are circumstanced, be Solmes's Wife. I will not be very rash, my dear, in protesting to the contrary: But I think it never can, and, what is still more, never ought to be !- My temper, I know, is depended upon, But I have heretofore faid (a), that I have fomething in me of my Father's family, as well as of my Mother's. And have I any encouragement to follow too implicitly the example which my Mother fets of meekness, and resignedness to the wills of others? Is the not for ever obliged (as the was pleased to hint to me) to be of the forbearing fide? In my Mother's case, your observation I must own is verified, that those who will bear much, shall have much to bear (b). What is it, as she says, that she has not facrificed to peace ?- Yet, has she by her sacrifices always found the peace she has deserved to find? Indeed No!-I am afraid the very contrary. And often and often have I had reason (on her account) to reflect, that we poor mortals, by our over-solicitude to preferve undisturbed the qualities we are constitutionally fond of, frequently lose the benefits we propose to ourfelves from them: Since the defigning and encroaching (finding out what we most fear to forfeit) direct their batteries against these our weaker places, and, making an artillery (if I may so phrase it) of our hapes and fears, play it upon us at their pleafure.

Steadiness of mind (a quality which the ill-bred and censorious deny to any of our Sex) when we are absolutely convinced of being in the right [Otherwise it is not steadiness, but obstinacy] and when it is exerted in material cases, is a quality, which, as my good Dr. Lewen was wont to say, brings great credit to the possessor of it; at the same time that it usually, when tried and known, raises such above the attempts of the meanly machinating. He used therefore to inculcate upon me this steadiness, upon laudable convictions. And why may I not think that I am now put upon a proper exercise of it?

(a) See Letter ix. p. 50, 51.

(b) P. 55.

1.

nuc

ir-

ery

it I

ver

on.

ing

10-

too

of

Is

t to

er's

hat

(6).

to

and

-1

ten

hat

rve

ond

ur-

ch-

rect

nd,

opes

red

are wife

ex-

my edit

lly,

ben

I faid above, that I never can be, that I never ought to be, Mrs. Solmes .- I repeat, that I ought not: For furely, my dear, I should not give up to my Brother's ambition the happiness of my future Surely I ought not to be the instrument of depriving Mr. Solmes's Relations of their natural rights and reversionary prospects, for the sake of further aggrandizing a family (altho' that I am of) which already lives in great affluence and splendor; and which might be as justly diffatisfied, were all that fome of it aim at, to be obtained, that they were not Princes, as now they are, that they are not Peers [For when ever was an ambitious mind, as you observe in the case of avarice (a), satisfied by acquisition?]. The less, furely, ought I to give into these grasping views of my Brother, as I myself heartily despise the end aimed at; as I wish not either to change my State, or better my Fortunes; and as I am fully perfuaded, that Happiness and Riches are two things, and very feldom meet together.

Yet I dread, I exceedingly dread, the conflicts I know I must encounter with. It is possible, that I may be more unhappy from the due observation of the good Doctor's general precept, than were I to yield the point; since what I call Steadiness is deemed stubbornness, obstinacy, prepossession, by those who have a right to put what interpretation they please upon my conduct.

So, my dear, were we perfect (which no one can be) we could not be happy in this life, unless those with whom we have to deal (those more especially who have any controul upon us) were governed by

(a) See Letter x. p. 55.

L

in

W

in

or tel

my

is t

COL

to

bor

wit

laft

to I

as r

who

you

will

on 1

ing

have take

1

the same principles. But then does not the good Doctor's conclusion recur,—That we have nothing to do, but to chuse what is right; to be steady in the pursuit of it; and to leave the issue to Providence?

This, if you approve of my motives (and if you don't, pray inform me) must be my aim in the prefent case.

941

But what then can I plead for a palliation to myfelf of my Mother's sufferings on my account? Perhaps This consideration will carry some force with it—That her difficulties cannot last long; only till this great struggle shall be one way or other determined—Whereas my unhappiness, if I comply, will (from an aversion not to be overcome) be for life. To which let me add, That as I have reason to think that the present measures are not entered upon with her own natural liking, she will have the less pain, should they want the success which I think in my heart they ought to want.

I have run a great length in a very little time. The subject touched me to the quick. My reflections upon it will give you reason to expect from me a perhaptor stee steady a behaviour in a new conference, which, I find, I must have with my Mother. My Father and Brother, as she was pleased to tell me, dine at my Uncle Antony's; and that, as I have reason to believe, on purpose to give an opportunity for it.

Hannah informs me, that she heard my Father chigh and angry with my Mother, at taking leave of her: I suppose for being too favourable to me; for Hannah heard her say, as in tears, 'Indeed, Mr. 'Harlowe, you greatly distress me!—The poor girl does not deserve—'Hannah heard no more, but that he said, he would break somebody's heart—Mine, I suppose—Not my Mother's, I hope.

As only my Sister dines with my Mother, I thought I should have been commanded down: But she sent me up a plate from her table. I continued my write-

ing.

boo

ing

the

HOY

re-

eself

aps

this

d-

an

the

own

hey

The

pon

napi

h, 1

and

my

be-

ther

e of

for

Mr.

girl

but

ine,

ught

lent

rite-

ing.

ing. I could not touch a morfel. I ordered Hannah however to eat it, that I might not be thought fullen.

Before I conclude this, I will see whether any-thing offers from either of my private correspondencies, that will make it proper to add to it; and will take a turn in the wood-yard and garden for that purpose.

I AM stopped. Hannah shall deposit this. She was ordered by my Mother (who asked where I was) to tell me, that she would come up and talk with me in my own closet.—She is coming! Adieu, my dear.

LETTER XX.

Miss CLARISSA HARLOWE, To Miss Howe.

Sat. Afternoon.

THE expected conference is over: But my difficulties are encreased. This, as my Mother was pleased to tell me, being the last persuasory effort that is to be attempted, I will be as particular in the account of it as my head and my heart will allow me to be.

I have made, said she, as she entered my room, a short as well as early dinner, on purpose to confer with you: And I do assure you, that it will be the last conference I shall either be permitted or inclined to hold with you on the subject, if you should prove as refractory as it is imagined you will prove by some, who are of opinion, that I have not the weight with you which my indulgence deserves. But I hope you will convince as well them as me of the contrary.

Your Father both dines and sups at your Uncle's, on purpose to give us this opportunity; and according to the report I shall make on his return (which I have promised shall be a very faithful one) he will take his measures with you.

I was offering to speak—Hear, Clariffa, what I

LET

it.

flav

the

be

vou

una leni

1 cafe

wh

for

Ma

me

wil

nua

old

dep

cles

vou

abl

rit

for

the

F cer

Bro

hea

(ub

the

tho

pre

abr

S

I

I

have to tell you, faid the, before you speak, unless what you have to say will signify to me your compliance—Say—Will it?—If it will, you may speak.

I was filent.

She looked with concern and anger upon me—No compliance, I find!—Such a dutiful young creature hitherto!—Will you not, can you not, speak as I would have you speak?—Then [rejecting me as it were with her hand] continue filent.—I, no more than your Father, will bear your avowed contradiction.

She paused, with a look of expectation, as if she waited for my confenting answer.

I was still filent; looking down; the tears in my eyes.

O thou determined girl!—But fay—Speak out— Are you resolved to stand in opposition to us all, in a point our hearts are set upon?

May I, Madam, be permitted to expostulate?-

Your Father is determined. Have I not told you there is no receding; that the honour as well as the interest of the samily is concerned? Be ingenuous: You used to be so, even occasionally against yoursels:

—Who at the long-run must submit—all of us to you; or you to all of us?—If you intend to yield at last if you find you cannot conquer, yield now, and with a grace—for yield you must, or be none of our child.

I wept. I knew not what to fay; or rather how to express what I had to say.

Take notice, that there are flaws in your Grandfather's Will: Not a shilling of that Estate will be yours, if you do not yield. Your Grandfather lest it to you, as a reward of your duty to bim and to us —You will justly forfeit it, if—

Permit me, good Madam, to fay, that, if it were unjustly be-queathed me, I ought not to wish to have

it

I

ess

m-

No

are

1

it

ore

ic.

he

ny

a

a ?

ou

he

S:

f:

to

at

nd

ur

W

d-

be

eft

245 re

ve

it

it. But I hope Mr. Solmes will be apprised of these

This is very pertly faid, Clariffa: But reflect, that the forfeiture of that Estate thro' your opposition will be attended with the total loss of your Father's favour: And then how destitute must you be; how unable to support yourself; and how many benevolent designs and good actions must you give up!

I must accommodate myself, Madam, in the latter case, to my circumstances: Much only is required where much is given. It becomes me to be thankful for what I have had. I have reason to bless You, Madam, and my good Mrs. Norton, for bringing me up to be satisfied with little; but much less, I will venture to say, than my Father's indulgence annually confers upon me.—And then I thought of the old Roman and his Lentils.

What perverseness! said my Mother.—But if you depend upon the favour of either or both of your Uncles, vain will be that dependence: They will give you up, I do assure you, if your Father does, and absolutely renounce you.

I am forry, Madam, that I have had so little merit as to have made no deeper impressions of favour for me in their hearts: But I will love and honour them as long as I live.

All this, Clariffa, makes your prepossession in a certain man's favour the more evident. Indeed your Brother and Sister cannot go any-whither, but they hear of these prepossessions.

It is a great grief to me, Madam, to be made the subject of the public talk: But I hope you will have the goodness to excuse me for observing, that the authors of my disgrace within-doors, the talkers of my prepossession without, and the reporters of it from abroad, are originally the same persons.

She severely chid me for this.

I received her rebukes in silence.

You are sullen, Clarissa: I see you are sullen .-And the walked about the room in anger. Then turning to me-You can bear the imputation of fullenness I see!-You have no concern to clear yourfelf of it. I was afraid of telling you all I was enjoined to tell you, in case you were to be unpersuade. able: But I find that I had a greater opinion of your delicacy, of your gentleness, than I needed to have-It cannot discompose so steady, so inflexible a young creature, to be told, as I now tell you, that the Settlements are actually drawn; and that you will be called down in a very few days to hear them read, and to fign them: For it is impossible, if your heart be free, that you can make the least objection to them; except it will be an objection with you, that they are fo much in your favour, and in the favour of all our family.

I was speechless, absolutely speechless. Altho' my heart was ready to burst, yet could I neither weep nor fpeak.

401

I am forry, faid she, for your averseness to this match [Match she was pleased to call it!]: But there is no help. The honour and interest of the family, as your Aunt has told you, and as I have told you, are concerned; and you must comply.

I was still speechless.

She folded the warm Statue, as she was pleased to call me, in her arms; and entreated me, for Heaven's fake, and for her fake, to comply.

Speech and Tears were lent me at the same time.—You have given me Life, Madam, said I, clasping my uplifted hands together, and falling on one knee; a happy one, till now, has your goodness, and my Papa's, made it! O do not, do not, make all the remainder of it miserable!

Your Father, replied she, is resolved not to see you, till he sees you as obedient a child as you used to be. You have never been put to a test till now,

that

th

be

ch

ol

M

ne

Sł

p

m

. 1.

hen ful-

ur-

en-

ide-

our

e-

ing

et-

be

ad,

eart

to

hat

our

my

eep

this

But

the

ave

d to

ea.

-

ing

ee;

my

fee

fed

ow,

20 11

con-

that deserved to be called a test. This is, This must be, my last effort with you. Give me hope, my dear child: My peace is concerned: I will compound with you but for bope: And yet your Father will not be satisfied without an implicit, and even a chearful obedience—Give me but hope, my child!

To give you hope, my dearest, my most indulgent Mamma, is to give you every-thing. Can I be honest, if I give a hope that I cannot confirm?

She was very angry. She again called me perverse: She upbraided me with regarding only my own prepossessions, and respecting not either her peace of mind, or my own: - 'It is a grating thing, faid ' she, for the parents of a child, who delighted in her in all the time of her helples infancy, and throughout every stage of her childhood; and in every part of her education to womanhood, because of the promises the gave of proving the most grate-' ful and dutiful of children; to find, just when the time arrived which should crown their wishes, that ehild stand in the way of her own happiness, and her parents comfort, and, refuling an excellent offer, and noble fettlements, give suspicions to her anxious friends, that the would become the property of a vile Rake and Libertine, who (be the occa-' fion what it will) defies her family, and has actually 'embrued his hands in her Brother's blood.

'I have had a very hard time of it, faid she, between your Father and you; for, seeing your dislike, I have more than once pleaded for you: But all to no purpose. I am only treated as a too fond Mother, who, from motives of a blameable indulgence, encourage a child to stand in opposition to a Father's will. I am charged with dividing the family into two parts; I and my youngest Daughter standing against my Husband, his two Brother's, my Son, my eldest Daughter, and my Sister Hervey. I have been told, that I must be

LET.

Iw

( to !

of

c tud

abl

and

" wh

my r datin

men

Mot

· yo

· me

6 th

6 to

· fic

· fa te:

· do

frigl

war

muf

fay,

of t

and

prid

was to e

this

· fo

· fo

· to 6 br

I

ple

SI

Bu

convinced of the fitness as well as advantage to the whole (your Brother and Mr. Lovelace out of the question) of carrying the contract with Mr. Solmes. on which so many contracts depend, into execution.

Your Father's heart, I tell you once more, is in it: He has declared, that he had rather have no Daughter in you, than one he cannot dispose of for your own good: Especially as you have owned, that your heart is free; and as the general good of his whole family is to be promoted by your obedience. He has pleaded, poor man! that his frequent gouty paroxysms (every Fit more threatening than the former) give him no extraordinary prospects, either of worldly happiness, or of long days: And he hopes, that you, who have been supposed to have contributed to the lengthening of your Grandfather's life, will not, by your disobedience, shorten your Father's.'

This was a most affecting plea, my dear. I wept in silence upon it. I could not speak to it. And my Mother proceeded: 'What therefore can be his motives, Clary Harlowe, in the earnest desire he has to fee this treaty perfected, but the welfare and aggrandizement of his Family; which already having fortunes to become the highest condition, cannot but aspire to greater distinctions? However slight fuch views as these may appear to you, Clary, you know, that they are not flight ones to any other of the family: And your Father be his own judge of what is and what is not likely to promote the good of his children. Your abstractedness, child; (Affectation of abstractedness some call it) favours, Iet me tell you, of greater particularity, than what we aim to carry. Modesty and Humility therefore will oblige you rather to mistrust yourself of peculiarity, then censure views which all the world purfues, as opportunity offers.

I was

I was still filent; and she proceeded—'It is owing to the good opinion, Clary, which your Father has of you, and of your prudence, duty, and gratitude, that he engaged for your compliance, in your absence (before you returned from Miss Howe); and that he built and finished contracts upon it, which cannot be made void, or cancelled.'

But why then, thought I, did they receive me, on my return from Miss Howe, with so much intimidating solemnity?—To be sure, my dear, this argument, as well as the rest, was obtruded upon my Mother.

he

nė

3,

1-

is 10

10

١.

of

.

.

-

y

g

n

of 1

t

4

5

4

g

t

t

u

f

e:

ė

Š

t

She went on, 'Your Father has declared, that 'your unexpected opposition [Unexpected she was 'pleased to call it] and Mr. Lovelace's continued menaces and insults, more and more convince him, that a short day is necessary in order to put an end to all that man's hopes, and to his own apprehensions resulting from the disobedience of a child so favoured. He has therefore actually ordered Patterns of the richest Silks to be sent for from London.

I started—I was out of breath—I gasped, at this frightful precipitance—I was going to open with warmth against it. I knew whose the bappy expedient must be: Female minds, I once heard my Brother say, that could but be brought to balance on the change of their State, might easily be determined by the glare and splendor of the Nuptial Preparations, and the pride of becoming the mistress of a family.—But she was pleased to hurry on, that I might not have time to express my disgusts at such a communication—to this effect:

'Your Father therefore, my Clary, cannot, either for your fake, or his own, labour under a suspense so affecting to his repose. He has even thought fit to acquaint me, on my pleading for you, that it becomes me, as I value my own peace [How barsh

LET

eith

give

ove

glor littl

with

able

low

mar

resp

cati

Soli

hun

and

to a

muf

flect

Ma

ness

crue

to g

WOL

is t

can

And

dea

fron

fign

she pell

mer

ftan

I h

• to fuch a Wife!] and as I wish, that he do not fuspect that I fecretly favour the address of a vile

Rake (a character which all the Sex, he is pleafed to fay, virtuous and vicious, are but too fond of!) to exert my authority over you: And that This!

may the less scrupulously do, as you have owned

" [The old string!] that your heart is free."

This of our Sex's valuing a Libertine; fince the made choice of my Father in preference to several fuitors of equal fortune, because they were of inferior reputation for morals!

Your Father, added she, at his going out, told me what he expected from me, in case I found that

• I had not the requifite influence upon you—It was this—That I should directly separate myself from you, and leave you singly to take the consequence of your double disobedience—I therefore entreat you, my dear Clarissa, concluded she, and that in the most earnest and condescending manner, to signify to your Father, on his return, your ready obedience; and this as well for my fake as for your own.

Affected by my Mother's goodness to me, and by that part of her argument which related to her own peace, and to the suspicions they had of her secretly inclining to prefer the man so hated by them, to the man so much my aversion, I could not but wish it were possible for me to obey. I therefore paused, hesitated, considered, and was silent for some time. I could see, that my Mother hoped that the result of this hesitation would be favourable to her arguments. But then recollecting, that all was owing to the instigations of a Brother and Sister, wholly actuated by selfish and envious views; That I had not deserved the treatment I had of late met with; That my disgrace was already become the public talk; That the man was Mr. Solmes; and that my aversion to him

Was

.1.

not

vile

fed

f!Y

is I

ned

ely,

the

eral

fe-

old

bat

Was

om

nce

eat

in ig-

dy

for

by

WII

tly

he

it

ed,

of

ts.

ti-

by

ed

if-

he

im

725

was too generally known, to make my compliance either creditable to myfelf or to them : That it would give my Brother and Sifter a triumph over me, and over Mr. Lovelace, which they would not fail to glory in; and which, altho' it concerned me but little to regard on his account, yet might be attended with fatal mischiefs-And then Mr. Solmes's disagreeable person; his still more disagreeable manners; his low understanding—Understanding! the glory of a man, fo little to be dispensed with in the head and director of a family, in order to preserve to him that respect which a good Wife (and that for the justification of her own choice) should pay him herself, and with every-body to pay him - And as Mr. Solmes's inferiority in this respectable faculty of the human mind [I must be allowed to say this to you, and no great self-assumption neither] would proclaim to all future, as well as to all present observers, what must have been my mean inducement—All these reflections crouding upon my remembrance; I would, Madam, faid I, folding my hands, with an earnestness in which my whole heart was engaged, bear the cruelest tortures, bear loss of limb, and even of life, to give you peace. But this man, every moment I would, at your command, think of him with favour, is the more my aversion. You cannot, indeed you cannot, think, how my whole Soul refifts him!-And to talk of Contracts concluded upon; of Patterns; of a Short Day!—Save me, fave me, O my dearest Mamma, fave your child, from this heavy, from this insupportable evil !-

Never was there a countenance that expressed To significantly, as my Mother's did, an anguish, which she struggled to hide, under an anger she was compelled to assume—Till the latter overcoming the former, she turned from me with an uplisted eye; and stamping—Strange perverseness! were the only words I heard of a sentence that she angrily pronounced;

and

LET

T

grie

tion

muc

the

upol

Yet

undu

ther

very fon

F

dear

the

poff

equa

ftur

nac

that

com

will hov

to b min

with

Rat

I

not

(we fice

nov

fud

tan

giv

givi

fuc

fen

ear

and was going. I then, half franticly I believe, laid hold of her gown—Have patience with me, dearest Madam! faid I—Do not you renounce me totally!—If you must separate yourself from your child, let it not be with absolute reprobation on your own part!—My Uncles may be hard-hearted—My Father may be immoveable—I may suffer from my Brother's Ambition, and from my Sister's Envy!—But let me not lose my Mamma's Love; at least, her Pity.

She turned to me with benigner rays—You have my Love! You have my Pity! But, O my dearest girl-I have not yours.

Indeed, indeed, Madam, you have: And all my Reverence, all my Gratitude, you have!—But in this one point—Cannot I be this once obliged?—Will no expedient be accepted? Have I not made a very fair proposal as to Mr. Lovelace?

I wish, for both our sakes, my dear unpersuadeable girl, that the decision of this point lay with me. But why, when you know it does not, why should you thus perplex and urge me?—To renounce Mr. Lovelace is now but balf what is aimed at. Nor will any-body else believe you in earnest in the offer, if I would. While you remain single, Mr. Lovelace will have hopes—and you, in the opinion of others, inclinations.

Permit me, dearest Madam, to say, That your goodness to me, your patience, your peace, weigh more with me, than all the rest put together: For altho' I am to be treated by my Brother, and, thro' his instigations, by my Father, as a Slave in this point, and not as a Daughter, yet my mind is not that of a Slave. You have not brought me up to be mean.

So, Clary! you are already at defiance with your Father! I have had too much cause before to apprebend as much—What will this come to?—I, and then my dear Mamma sighed—I, am forced to put up with many humours—

Chat

L. ].

laid

arest

!-

et it

4 y be

nbi-

not bave

reft

my

in

Vill

rery

ide-

me.

uld

Mr.

Nor

fer,

ve-

of

lour.

igh

For

ro

ot,

of a.

JUC

re-

ind

put

hat

That you are, my ever-honoured Mamma, is my grief. And can it be thought, that this very confideration, and the apprehension of what may result from a much worse tempered man (a man, who has not half the sense of my Father) has not made an impression upon me, to the disadvantage of the married life? Yet 'tis something of an alleviation, if one must bear undue controul, to bear it from a man of sense, My Father, I have heard you say, Madam, was for years a very good-humoured gentleman—Unobjectible in person and manners—But the man proposed to me—forbear reflecting upon your Father [Did I, my dear, in what I have repeated, and I think they are the very words, reflect upon my Father?]: It is not possible, I must say again, and again, were all men equally indifferent to you, that you should be thus stury in your will. I am tired out with your obstinacy—The most unpersuadeable girl—You forget, that I must separate myself from you, if you will not comply. You do not remember that your Father will take you up, where I leave you. Once more, however, I will put it to you,—Are you determined to brave your Father's displeasure?—Are you determined to defy your Uncles?—Do you chuse to break with us all, rather than encourage Mr. Solmes?—Rather than give me hope?

Dreadful alternative—But is not my fincerity, is not the integrity of my heart, concerned in my answer? May not my everlasting happiness be the sacrifice? Will not the least shadow of the bope you just now demanded from me, he driven into absolute and sudden certainty? Is it not sought to ensure, to entangle me in my own desire of obeying, if I could give answers that might be construed into hope?—Forgive me, Madam: Bear with your child's boldness in such a cause as This!—Settlements drawn?—Patterns sent for!—An Early Day!—Dear, dear Madam, how can I give hope, and not intend to be this man's?

Ah

LET

her 1

my ]

kind

be an

M a nai

Letti

one 1

whic

frien

I H

made

tell y

Sifter

her f

my :

with

givin

clear

Brot

taker

1

the f

turn,

ion f

that reque

lowe

Y

I

I

Ah, girl, never say your beart is free! You de. ceive yourself if you think it is.

Thus to be driven [and I wrung my hands thro' impatience] by the instigations of a designing, an ambitious Brother, and by a Sister, that-

How often, Clary, must I forbid your unsisterly reflections?-Does not your Father, do not your Uncles, does not every-body, patronize Mr. Solmes? And let me tell you, ungrateful girl, and unmove. able as ungrateful, let me repeatedly tell you, that it is evident to me, that nothing but a Love unworthy of your prudence can make a creature late fo dutiful, now fo sturdy. You may guess what your Father's first question on his return will be. He must know, that I can do nothing with you. I have done my Seek me, if your mind change before he comes back: You have yet a little more time, as he stays fupper. I will no more feek you, nor to you .- And away the flung.

What could I do but weep?

I am extremely affected on my Mother's accountmore, I must needs say, than on my own. And indeed all things confidered; and especially, that the measure she is engaged in, is (as I dare say it is) against her own judgment; she deserves more compassion than myself. - Excellent woman! What pity, that meekness and condescension should not be attended with the due rewards of those charming graces !- Yet had the not let violent spirits (as l have elsewhere observed with no small regret) find their power over hers, it could not have been thus.

But here, run away with by my pen, I suffer my Mother to be angry with me on her own account. She hinted to me, indeed, that I must seek her, if my mind changed; which is a condition that amounts to a prohibition of attending her: But, as the left me in displeasure, will it not have a very obstinate appearance, and look like a kind of renunciation of her mediation in my favour, if I go not down before my Father returns, to supplicate her pity, and her kind report to him?

I will attend her. I had rather all the world should be angry with me than my Mamma!

Mean time, to clear my hands from papers of fuch a nature, Hannah shall deposit this. If two or three Letters reach you together, they will but express, from one period to another, the anxieties and difficulties which the mind of your unhappy but ever affectionate friend labours under. a difolesime senione

CL. H.

LETTER

Miss CLARISSA HARLOWE, To Miss Howe.

Sat. Night.

HAVE been down. I am to be unlucky in all I do, I think, be my intentions ever fo good. I have made matters worse instead of better: As I shall now tell you.

. I.

de-

ro'

an erly

our

les?

oveat it

thy ful, er's

ow, my

nies

ays And

ıt-

in-

the 15)

om-

ity,

at-

ing

IS I

find

15.

my

int.

, if

ints

left

ate

of

her

I found my Mother and Sifter together in my Sifter's parlour. My Mother, I fear, by the glow in her fine face (and as the browner, fullener glow in my Sifter's confirmed) had been expressing herself with warmth, against her unhappier child: Perhaps giving fuch an account of what had paffed, as should clear herself, and convince Bella, and thro' ber, may Brother and Uncles, of the fincere pains the had taken with me.

I entered like a dejected criminal; and befoughtthe favour of a private audience. My Mother's return, both looks and words, gave but too much rea-ion for my above furmize.

You have, faid she [looking at me with a sternness that never fits well on her sweet features] rather a requesting than a conceding countenance, Clarissa Harlowe: If I am mistaken, tell me so; and I will withdraw

as if

Dry

first my S and by m cold addr Miss

hand

Mot

my 1

had

Sifte

mov

теро

ther

this

Mr.

into

in n

foor

dray

Soli

nity

fam

him

any

I

1

V

T

M

1

I

draw with you where-ever you will.—Yet whether fo, or not, you may fay what you have to fay before your Sifter.

My Mother, I thought, might have withdrawn with me, as she knows, that I have not a friend in my Sifter.

I come down, Madam, faid I, to beg of you to forgive me for-any thing you may have taken amiss in what passed above respecting your honoured self; and that you will be pleased to use your endeavours to soften my Papa's displeasure against me on his return.

Such aggravating looks; fuch lifting up of hands and eyes; fuch a furrowed forehead, in my Sifter!

My Mother was angry enough without all that; and asked me, To what purpose I came down, if I were still so untractable.

She had hardly spoken the words, when Shorey came in to tell her, that Mr. Solmes was in the hall, and defired admittance.

Ugly creature! What, at the close of day, quite dark, brought him hither?—But, on second thoughts, I believe it was contrived, that he should be here at Supper, to know the result of the conference between my Mother and me, and that my Father, on his return, might find us together.

I was hurrying away, but my Mother commanded me (fince I had come down only, as she said, to mock her) not to stir; and at the same time see if I could behave so to Mr. Solmes, as might encourage her to make the savourable report to my Father which I had befought her to make.

My Sister triumphed. I was vexed to be so caught, and to have such an angry and cutting rebuke given me, with an aspect more like the taunting Sister than the indulgent Mother, if I may presume to say so: For she herself seemed to enjoy the surprise upon me.

The

. I.

ther

fore

nwi

d in

to sin

and

to

re-

nds

at:

if I

rev

all,

uite

hts,

at een

re-

ded

ock

uld

r to

had

ht,

ven

nan

fo:

noc

he

!

The man stalked in. His usual walk is by pauses, as if (from the same vacuity of thought which made Dryden's Clown whistle) he was telling his steps: And sift paid his clumsy respects to my Mother; then to my Sister; next to me, as if I were already his Wise, and therefore to be last in his notice; and sitting down by me, told us in general what weather it was. Very cold he made it; but I was warm enough. Then addressing himself to me; And how do you find it, Miss? was his question; and would have taken my hand.

l withdrew it, I believe with disdain enough. My Mother frowned. My Sister bit her lip.

I could not contain myself: I was never so bold in my life; for I went on with my plea, as if Mr. Solmes had not been there.

My Mother coloured, and looked at him, at my Sifter, and at me. My Sifter's eyes were opener and bigger than ever I saw them before.

The man understood me. He hemmed, and removed from one chair to another.

I went on, fupplicating for my Mother's favourable report: Nothing but invincible dislike, said I-

What would the girl be at, interrupted my Mother? Why, Clary! Is this a subject!—Is this!—Is this!—Is this a time—And again she looked upon Mr. Solmes.

I am forry, on reflection, that I put my Mamma into so much confusion—To be sure it was very saucy in me.

I beg pardon, Madam, said I. But My Papa will soon return. And since I am not permitted to withdraw, it is not necessary, I humbly presume, that Mr. Solmes's presence should deprive me of this opportunity to implore your favourable report; and at the same time, if he still visit on my account [looking at him] to convince him, that it cannot possibly be to any purpose—

Is

Vol. L

Is the girl mad? faid my Mother, interrupting me, My Silter, with the affectation of a whisper to my Mother-This is-This is spite, Madam [Very spite. fully fhe spoke the word] because you commanded her to ftav.

I only looked at her, and turning to my Mother, Permit me, Madam, said I, to repeat my request. I have no Brother, no Sifter !- If I lose my Mamma's favour, I am lost for ever !

Mr. Solmes removed to his first feat, and fell to gnawing the head of his hazel; a carved head, almost as ugly as his own-I did not think the man was fo fensible.

My Sister rose, with a face all over scarlet; and flepping to the table, where lay a fan, she took it up, and, altho' Mr. Solmes had observed that the weather was cold, fanned herfelf very violently.

My Mother came to me, and angrily taking my hand, led me out of that parlour into my own; which, you know; is next to it—Is not this behaviour very bold, very provoking, think you, Clary!

I beg your pardon, Madam, if it has that appearance to you. But indeed, my dear Mamma, there feem to be fnares laying for me. Too well I know my Brother's drift. With a good word he shall have my confent for all he wishes to worm me out of-Neither he, nor my Sifter, shall need to take half this

My Mother was about to leave me in high difpleafure.

I besought her to stay: One favour, but one favour, dearest Madam, said I, give me leave to beg of you-

What would the girl?

I fee how every-thing is working about.—I never, never can think of Mr. Solmes. My Papa will be in tumults when he is told that I cannot. judge of the tenderness of your heart to a poor child who ingi pray me, prei

my a fect own Har ear

-1 to th will deni

Y gene M N

to n

of t

threa com you who tell fract ratio to us this ! he de you YOU T appe: mit,

Ag latter Betty vant :

V

....

me.

my

ite-

ded

ner,

na's

l to

noft

s fo

and

up,

her

my

vn;

ha-

ry!

ear-

ere

WO

ave

f-

this dif-

fa-

beg

ver,

be

will hild

who

who seems devoted by every one else, from the willingness you have already shewn to hearken to my prayers. There will be endeavours used to confine me, and keep me out of your presence, and out of the presence of every one who used to love me [This, my dear Miss Howe, is threatened.] If this be efsected; if it be put out of my power to plead my own cause, and to appeal to You, and to my Uncle.
Harlowe, of whom ony I have hope; then will every ear be opened against me, and every tale encouraged —It is, therefore, my humble request, That, added to the disgraceful prohibitions I now suffer under, you will not, if you can help it, give way to my being denied your ear.

Your liftening Hannah has given you this intelligence, as she does many others.

My Hannah, Madam, liftens not-My Hannah-No more in Hannah's behalf-Hannah is known to make mischief-Hannah is known-But no more of that bold intermeddler-'Tis true, your Father threatened to confine you to your chamber, if you complied not, in order the more affuredly to deprive you of the opportunity of corresponding with those who harden your heart against his will. He bid me tell you fo, when he went out, if I found you refractory. But I was loth to deliver so harsh a declaration; being still in hope that you would come down to us in a compliant temper. Hannah has overheard this I suppose; and has told you of it; as also, that he declared he would break your heart, rather than you should break his. And I now affure you, that you will be confined, and prohibited making teazing appeals to any of us: And we shall see who is to submit, You to us, or Every-body to you.

Again I offered to clear Hannah, and to lay the latter part of the intelligence to my Sifter's Echo, Betty Barnes, who had boafted of it to another fervant: But I was again bid to be filent on that head.

Vol. I. H I should

LE.

chil

to I

ject

way

you

kno

S

wer

my him

No

mo

cles

be l fup

am

fron

But

me.

was fhe

10-

Adi

1

I should soon find, my Mother was pleased to say, that others could be as determined as I was obstinate: And, once for all, would add, that since she saw that I built upon her indulgence, and was indifferent about involving her in contentions with my Father, and his Brothers, and with her other children, she would now assure that she was as much determined against Mr. Lovelace, and for Mr. Solmes and the samily schemes, as any-body; and would not refuse her consent to any measures that should be thought necessary to reduce a stubborn child to her duty.

I was ready to fink. She was fo good as to lend me heriarm to support me. ii glad has nov

And this, faid I, is all I have to hope for from my

It is. But, Clary, this one further opportunity I give you—Go in again to Mr. Solmes, and behave discreetly to him; and let your Father find you together, upon civil terms at least.

My feet moved [of themselves, I think] farther from the parlour where he was, and towards the stairs; and there I stopped and paufed.

If, proceeded she, you are determined to stand in defiance of us all—then indeed may you go up to your chamber (as you are ready to do)—And God help you!

God help me indeed! for I cannot give hope of what I cannot intend—But let me have your prayers, my dear Mamma!—Those shall have mine, who have brought me into all this diffress.

And will you go up, Clary?

I turned my face to her: My officious tears would needs plead for me: I could not just then speak; and stood still.

Good girl, distress me not thus !—Dear, good girl, do not thus distress me! holding out her hand; but standing still likewise.

What

What can I do, Madam?—What can I do?

Go in again, my child-Go in again, my dear child !- repeated she; and let your Father find you

What, Madam, to give him hope?-To give hope to Mr. Solmes ? an adecord alu

Obstinate, perverse, undutiful Clariffa! with a rejecting hand, and angry aspect; then take your own way, and go up !- But ftir not down again, I charge you, without leave, or till your Father's pleafure be known concerning you.

She flung from me with high indignation: And I went up with a very heavy heart; and feet as flow as my heart was heavy. south of bus com at avail vounger Sifter is very in the be Mr. Solmes My Father is come home, and my Brother with him. Late as it is, they are all thut up together. Not a door opens; not a foul stirs. Hannah, as she moves up and down, is shunned as a person infected.

he lays. On Ors the rame things THE angry affembly is broken up. My two Uncles and my Aunt Hervey are fent for, it feems, to be here in the morning to breakfast. I shall then, I suppose, know my doom. 'Tis past Eleven, and I am ordered not to go to bed.

Twelve o'clock. This moment the keys of every-thing are taken from me. It was proposed to send for me down: But my Father said, he could not bear to look upon me.—Strange alteration in a few weeks!—Shorey was the messenger. The tears stood in her eyes when the delivered her message.

You, my dear, are happy-May you always be 10-And then I can never be wholly miferable.

Adieu, my beloved friend!

Classing a grafibio I sid svil b CL. HARLOWE.

a Large to be taken as a yougher for nim. loo lever day was some H 2 same and L E T-

.... fay,

ate: that oout

his now ainA

rily. con-

Hary l me

my

ity I have

oge-

from and

d in p to God

ne of yers, have

ould and girl, but

Vhat

· i

6 j

· t 6 to

· I

6 C

· h

WOI

and

fure

tect

nan

trea

enta

bash

to I give oug

tuni

I ha

othe

like

Lov

ation

more

mak

addr

long

diffic

-10

It

F

1

LETTER XXII.

Miss CLARISSA HARLOWE, To Miss Howe.

Sunday Morning, March 5.

HANNAH has just brought me, from the pri-vate place in the garden-wall, a Letter from Mr. Lovelace, deposited last night, signed also by Lord M.

He tells me in it, 'That Mr. Solmes makes it his boaft, that he is to be married in a few days to one of the shyest women in England: That my Brother explains his meaning; This fly creature, he fays, is me; and he affures every one, that his ' younger Sifter is very foon to be Mr. Solmes's Wife,

He tells me of the patterns bespoken which my Mother mentioned to me.'

Not one thing escapes him that is done or said in this house. tunned as a perf My Sifter, he fays, reports the fame things; and that with fuch particular aggravations of infult upon bim, that he cannot but be extremely piqued, as well at the manner, as from the occasion; and exf presses himself with great violence upon it.

' He knows not, he fays, what my Relations inducements can be, to prefer such a man as Solmes to him. If advantageous Settlements be the motive, Solmes shall not offer what he will refuse to com-oply with.

As to his Estate, and Family; the first cannot be excepted against: And for the second, he will not difference himself by a comparison so odious.

appeals to Lord M. for the regularity of his life and manners ever fince he has made his addresses to me, or had hope of my favour.'

I suppose, he would have his Lordship's signing to this Letter to be taken as a voucher for him.

· He defires my leave (in company with my Lord in a pacific manner) to attend my Father and Uncles, in order to make proposals that must be accepted, if they will but see him, and hear what they are: And tells me, that he will submit to any measures that I shall prescribe, in order to bring about a Reconciliation.

He presumes to be very earnest with me, to give him a private meeting some night, in my Father's garden, attended by whom I please."

Really, my dear, were you to see his Letter, you would think I had given him great encouragement, and that I am in direct treaty with him; or that he is sure that my friends will drive me into a foreign protection; for he has the boldness to offer, in my Lord's name, an asylum to me, should I be tyrannically treated in Solmes's behalf.

I suppose it is the way of this Sex to endeavour to entangle the thoughtless of ours by bold supposals and offers, in hopes that we shall be too complaisant or bashful to quarrel with them; and, if not checked, to reckon upon our silence, as assents voluntarily given, or concessions made in their favour.

There are other particulars in this Letter which I ought to mention to you: But I will take an opportunity to fend you the Letter itself, or a Copy of it.

For my own part I am very uneafy to think how I have been drawn on one hand, and driven on the other, into a clandestine, in short, into a mere Lover-like correspondence, which my heart condemns.

It is easy to see, if I do not break it off, that Mr. Lovelace's advantages, by reason of my unhappy situation, will every day increase, and I shall be more and more entangled. Yet if I do put an end to it, without making it a condition of being freed from Mr. Solmes's address—May I, my dear, is it best to continue it a little longer, in hopes to extricate myself out of the other difficulty, by giving up all thoughts of Mr. Lovelace?

—Whose advice can I now ask but yours?

H 3

All

om by

his

ri-

rohe his ife.

my

l in and pon

inmes ive,

t be not He and me, g to

ord

IIA

All my Relations are met. They are at breakfast together. Mr. Solmes is expected. I am excessively uneasy. I must lay down my pen.

THEY are all going to church together. Grievously disordered they appear to be, as Hannah tells me. She believes something is resolved upon.

Sunday Noon.

LE

I

this

fant

requ

wel

was

that pra

aga

wife

the I, b

any

to I

who

repu

head

the

for an a

to I

com deve of o

ever

to I

What a cruel thing is suspense!—I will ask leave to go to church this afterooon. I expect to be denied: But if I do not ask, they may alledge, that my not going is owing to myself...

I DESIRED to speak with Shorey. Shorey came, I directed her to carry to my Mother my request for permission to go to church this afternoon. What think you was the return? Tell her, that she must direct herself to her Brother for any favour she has to ask.—So, my dear, I am to be delivered up to my Brother!

I was resolved, however, to ask of him this favour. Accordingly, when they sent me up my solitary dinner, I gave the messenger a billet, in which I made it my humble request thro' him to my Father, to be permitted to go to church this afternoon.

This was the contemptuous answer: "Tell her, that her request will be taken into consideration tomorrow."—My request to go to church to day to be taken into confideration to-morrow!

Patience will be the fittest return I can make to such an insult. But this method will not do with me; indeed it will not! And yet it is but the beginning, I suppose, of what I am to expect from my Brother, now I am delivered up to him.

On recollection, I thought it best to renew my request. I did. The following is a copy of what I wrote, and what follows that, of the Answer sent me.

SIR,

LET. 22.

faft

ely

ufly

She

1.

ave

ed:

go-

me.

for

hat

nuft

s to

my

our.

line it

be

her,

toy to

to ne;

ng,

her,

re-

ote,

I KNOW not what to make of the answer brought to my request of being permitted to go to church this afternoon. If you designed to shew your pleafantry by it, I hope that will continue; and then my request will be granted.

You know, that I never absented myself, when well, and at home, till the two last Sundays; when I was advised not to go. My present situation is such, that I never more wanted the benefit of the public prayers.

I will folemnly engage only to go thither, and back again.

I hope it cannot be thought that I would do other-

wife.

My dejection of spirits will give a too just excuse on the score of indisposition for avoiding visits. Nor will I, but by distant civilities, return the compliments of any of my acquaintance. My disgraces, if they are to have an end, need not to be proclaimed to the whole world. I ask this favour, therefore, for my reputation's sake, that I may be able to hold up my head in the neighbourhood, if I live te see an end of the unmerited severities which seem to be designed for

Your unhappy Sister, of or language to the CL. HARLOWE.

To Miss CLARISSA HARLOWE.

FOR a girl to lay so much stress upon going to church, and yet resolve to defy her Parents, in an article of the greatest consequence to them, and to the whole family, is an absurdity. You are recommended, Miss, to the practice of your private devotions. May they be efficacious upon the mind of one of the most pervicatious young creatures that ever was heard of! The intention is, I tell you plainly, to mortify you into a sense of your duty. The H 4

IR,

her

for

So

upo

beg I

(to requ

the Beti

I

H

vice

vind

mifo

turn

inte

indig

oblig with

N

with ture

to m bene

every

oblig

kind

one v tingu

ig

I

Vot. I.

neighbours you are so solicitous to appear well with, already know, that you defy that. So, Miss, if you have a real value for your reputation, shew it as you ought. It is yet in your own power to establish or impair it.

JA. HARLOWE.

Thus, my dear Miss Howe, has my Brother got me into his snares; and I, like a poor filly bird, the more I struggle, am the more entangled.

LETTER XXIII.

Miss CLARISSA HARLOWE, To Miss Howe.

Monday Morning, March 6.

THEY are resolved to break my heart. My poor Hannah is discharged—disgracefully discharged !- Thus it was.

Within half an hour after I had sent the poor girl down for my breakfast, that bold creature Betty Barnes, my Sister's confident and servant (if a favourite maid and confident can be deemed a servant) came up.

What, Miss, will you please to have for breakfast!
I was surprised. What will I have for breakfast, Betty!—How!—What!—How comes it!—Then! mamed Hannah. I could not tell what to say.

Don't be furprifed, Miss :- But you'll fee Hannah no more in this house.

God forbid !- Is any harm come to Hannah ?-

What! What is the matter with Hannah?

Why, Miss, the short and the long is this: Your Pappa and Mamma think Hannah has staid long enough in the house to do mischies; and so she is ordered to troop [That was the confident creature's word]; and I am directed to wait upon you in her stead.

I burst into tears. I have no service for you, Betty Barnes; none at all. But where is Hannah? Cannot

I speak

I speak with the poor girl? I owe her half a year's wages. May I not see the honest creature, and pay her her wages? I may never see her again perhaps; for they are resolved to break my heart.

And they think you are resolved to break theirs:

So tit for tat, Miss.

Impertinent I called her; and asked her, If it were upon such confident terms that her service was to begin.

I was so very earnest to see the poor maid, that (to oblige me, as she said) she went down with my request.

ith,

you

you

10 [

2.

got

the 5.

Mv

dif-

girl

etty

our-ant)

aft!

faft.

en l

nah

?-

our

ugh

d to

d];

etty

not

peak

The worthy creature was as earnest to see me; and the favour was granted in presence of Shorey and Betty.

I thanked her, when she came up, for her past service to me.

Her heart was ready to break. And she began to vindicate her fidelity and love; and disclaimed any mischief she had ever made.

I told her, that those who occasioned her being turned out of my service, made no question of her integrity: That her dismission was intended for an indignity to me. That I was very forry to be obliged to part with her, and hoped she would meet with as good a service.

Never, never, wringing her hands, should she meet with a mistress she loved so well. And the poor creature ran on in my praises, and in professions of love to me.

We are all apt, you know, my dear, to praise our benefactors, because they are our benefactors; as if every body did right or wrong, as they obliged or disobliged us. But this good creature deserved to be kindly treated; so I could have no merit in favouring one whom it would have been ungrateful not to distinguish.

I gave her a little linen, fome laces, and other odd H 5 things;

LE

fen

wh

att

ma

cor

you

fud

wh

pof

Lib

lear

vou

in a

the

hou

you

cha

figt

tur

and up a

verl

hav

28

you

1

VOL. I.

things; and instead of four pounds which were due to her, ten guineas: And said, if ever I were again allowed to be my own mistress, I would think of her in the first place.

Betty enviously whispered Shorey upon it.

Hannah told me, before their faces, having no other opportunity, that she had been examined about Letters to me, and from me: And that she had given her pockets to Miss Harlowe, who looked into them, and put her fingers in her stays, to satisfy herself that she had not any.

She gave me an account of the number of my Pheasants and Bantams; and I said, they should be my own care twice or thrice a day.

We wept over each other at parting. The girl prayed for all the family.

To have so good a servant so disgracefully dismissed, is very cruel: And I could not help saying that these methods might break my heart, but not any other way answer the end of the authors of my disgraces.

Betty, with a very faucy fleer, faid to Shorey, There would be a trial of skill about that, she fanfied. But I took no notice of it. If this wench thinks that I have robbed her young mistress of a Lover, as you say she has given out, she may believe that it is some degree of merit in herself to be impertinent to me.

Thus have I been forced to part with my faithful Hannah. If you can commend the good creature to a place worthy of her, pray do for my sake.

LETTER XXIV.

Miss CLARISSA HARLOWE, To Miss Howe.

Monday, near 12 o'clock.

THE inclosed Letter was just now delivered to many Brother has carried all his points.

I fend

I fend you also the copy of my answer. No more at this time can I write !- way and the to be due

gain f her

no bout

iven

em,

that

my

d be

girl

dit-

ving

not

my rey,

fan-

ench

of a

ieve

per-

hful

e to

me

fend

Miss CLARY, Monday, Mar. 6.

BY command of your Father and Mother I write expresly to forbid you to come into their prefence, or into the garden when they are there: Nor when they are not there, but with Betty Barnes to attend you; except by particular licence or command. mated to purfue your own inclinations fine

On their bleffings you are forbidden likewise to correspond with the vile Lovelace; as it is well known you did by means of your fly Hannah. Whence her fudden discharge. As was ht.

Neither are you to correspond with Miss Howe; who has given herfelf high airs of late; and might possibly help on your correspondence with that detested Libertine. Nor, in short, with any body without Metty Barnes has orders to obey too in

You are not to enter into the presence of either of your Uncles, without their leave first obtained. It is in mercy to you, after such a behaviour to your Mother, that your Father refuses to see you.

You are not to be feen in any apartment of the house you so lately governed as you pleased, unless you are commanded down.

In short, you are strictly to confine yourself to your chamber, except now-and-then, in Betty Barnes's fight (as aforefaid) you take a morning or evening turn in the garden : And then you are to go directly, and without flopping at any apartment in the way, up and down the back-flairs, that the fight of fo perverle a young creature may not add to the pain you have given every-body.

The hourly threatenings of your fine fellow, as well as your own unheard of obstinacy, will account to you for all this. What a hand has the best and most indulgent of Mothers had with you, who fo long

H 6

В

to

VOL

Bu

int

abl

COL

if wi

ha

ma

po

A

a

of

m

O

C

th

pleaded for you, and undertook for you; even when others, from the manner of your fetting out, despaired of moving you!—What must your perverseness have been, that fuch a Mother can give you up! She thinks it right so to do: Nor will take you to favour, unless you make the first steps, by a compliance with your duty.

As for myself, whom perhaps you think hardly of [In very good company, if you do, that is my consolation]; I have advised, that you may be permitted to pursue your own inclinations (some people need no greater punishment than such a permission) and not to have the house encumbered by one who must give them the more pain for the necessity she has laid them under of avoiding the sight of her, althoring it.

If any-thing I have written, appear severe or harsh, it is still in your power (but perhaps will not always be so) to remedy it; and that by a single word.

Betty Barnes has orders to obey you in all points confident with her duty to those to whom you owe it, as well as fhe.

JA. HARLOWE.

To JAMES HARLOWE, junior, Esq;

SIR,

WILL only fay, That you may congratulate yourself on having so far succeeded in all your views, that you may report what you please of me, and I can no more defend myself, than if I were dead. Yet one favour, nevertheless, I will beg of you. It is this—That you will not occasion more k verities, more disgraces, than are necessary for carrying into execution your further designs, whatever they be, against

Your unbappy Sifter,

CLARISSA HARLOWE.

. I.

hen

ness

She

our,

with rdly

my

per-

ople

ion)

who has

tho'

rth,

rays

ints

owe

WE.

late

luo

me,

vere

g of

ore

car-

WE.

LETTER XXV.

Miss CLARISSA HARLOWE, To Miss Howe.

Tuesday, March 7.

By my last deposit, you will see how I am driven, and what a poor prisoner I am.—No regard had to my reputation. The whole matter is now before you. Can such measures be supposed to soften?—But surely they can only mean to try to frighten me into my Brother's views!—All my hope is, to be able to weather this point till my Cousin Morden comes from Florence; and he is soon expected: Yet, if they are determined upon a short day, I doubt he will not be here time enough to save me.

It is plain by my Brother's Letter, that my Mother has not spared me, in the report she was pleased to make of the conference between herself and me: Yet she was pleased to hint to me, that my Brother had views which she wou'd have had me try to disappoint. But indeed she had engaged to give a faithful account of what was to pass between herself and me: And it was, doubtless, much more eligible to give up a Daughter, than to disoblige a Husband, and every other person of the family.

They think they have done every-thing by turning away my poor Hannah: But as long as the liberty of the garden, and my poultry visits, are allowed me, they will be mistaken.

I asked Mrs. Betty, if she had any orders to watch or attend me; or whether I was to ask her leave whenever I should be disposed to walk in the garden, or to go to feed my Bantams?—Lord bless her! what could I mean by such a question! Yet she owned, that she had heard, that I was not to go into the garden, when my Father, Mother, or Uncles were there.

However, as it behoved me to be affured on this head, head, I went down directly, and staid an hour, with.

out question or impediment; and yet a good part of the time, I walked under and in fight, as I may fay, of my Brother's study-window, where both he and my Sifter happened to be. And I am fure they faw me, by the loud mirth they affected, by way of infult, as I suppose. So this part of my reftraint was doubtless a stretch of the authority given him. The enforcing of that, may perhaps come next. But I hope not,

Vol. I

Tuefaay Night.

SINCE I wrote the above, I ventured to fend a Letter by Shorey to my Mother, I defired her to give it into her own hand, when no body was by.

I shall inclose the copy of it. You will see that I would have it thought, that now Hannah is gone, I have no way to correspond out of the house. I am far from thinking all I do, right. I am afraid, this is a little piece of art, that is not fo. But this is an after-thought-The Letter went first. account of wast was to puts tooks catherists and me;

Honoured Madamy

HAVING acknowledged to you, that I had re-ceived Letters from Mr. Lovelace full of refentment, and that I answered them purely to prevent further mischief; and having shewn you copies of my Answers, which you did not disapprove of, altho' you thought fit, after you had read them, to forbid me any further correspondence with him; I think it my duty to acquaint you, that another Letter from him has fince come to my hand, in which he is very earnest with me to permit him to wait on my Papa, or you, or my two Uncles, in a pacific way, accompanied by Lord M.: On which I beg your commands.

I own to you, Madam, that had not the prohibition been renewed, and had not Hannah been fo fuddenly, denl less com in o thin akes > thou who mife For fion deed

A

him obli Ma obli alth fact > dut fha can of t I a

> hov

fon he COL my and

(o) do, len ple fup

denly dismissed my service, I should have made the less scruple to have written an answer, and to have commanded her to convey it to him, with all speed, in order to diffuade him from these visits, lest anything should happen on the occasion that my heart akes but to think of.

L. I.

ith.

t of

fay,

and

law

in-tch

hat,

.

da

to

at I

, 1

am

his

an

rent-

ent

of 10'

oid

it

m ry

a, C-

n-

1-

d-

y,

And here I cannot but express my grief, that I should have all the punishment, and all the blame, who, as I have reason to think, have prevented great mischief, and have not been the occasion of any. For, Madam, could I be supposed to govern the pasfions of either of the gentlemen?—Over the one indeed I have had fome little influence, without giving him bitherto any reason to think he has fastened an obligation upon me for it-Over the other, Who, Madam, has any?-I am grieved at heart, to be obliged to lay so great blame at my Brother's door, altho' my reputation and my liberty are both to be facrificed to his refentment and ambition. May not, however, so deep a sufferer be permitted to speak out?

This communication being as voluntarily made, as dutifully intended; I humbly prefume to hope, that I shall not be required to produce the Letter itself. cannot either in honour or prudence do that, because of the vehemence of his stile; for having heard [not, I affure you, by my means or thro' Hannah's] of fome part of the harsh treatment I have met with; he thinks himfelf intitled to place it to his own account, by reason of speeches thrown out by some of my relations, equally vehement.

If I do not answer him, he will be made desperate, and think himself justified (tho' I shall not think him io) in refenting the treatment he complains of: If I do, and if, in compliment to me, he forbears to refent what he thinks himself intitled to resent; be pleased, Madam, to consider the obligation he will suppose he lays me under. W. radioid may ion small

If I were as ftrongly prepoffested in his favour as is supposed,

LE

gon

to I ledg

I

beca

fire

caul the

how resp

No

bou.

that

that held

kno

to n

Mr.

fron

that

with

Fath riffa

now

and

unde

ther

me i

and riffa

and But

thew

kno

fwer

will

1

I

supposed, I should not have wished this to be confidered by you. And permit me, as a still further proof that I am not prepoffeffed, to beg of you to confider, Whether, upon the whole, the proposal I made, of declaring for the Single Life (which I will religi. oully adhere to) is not the best way to get rid of his pretentions with honour. To renounce him, and not be allowed to aver, that I will never be the other man's, will make him conclude (driven as I am driven) that I am determined in that other man's favour,

If this has not its due weight, my Brother's strange schemes must be tried, and I will resign myself to my destiny with all the acquiescence that shall be granted to my prayers. And so leaving the whole to your own wisdom, and whether you chuse to consult my Papa and Uncles upon this humble application, or not; or whether I shall be allowed to write an answer to Mr. Lovelace, or not [ And if allowed so to do, I beg your direction, by whom to fend it]; I remain, Honoured Madam,

Your unhappy, but ever-dutiful Daughter, CL. HARLOWE.

Wednesday Morning.

I have just received an Answer to the inclosed Letter. My Mother, you will observe, has ordered me to burn it: But, as you will have it in your fafe keeping, and nobody else will see it, her end will be equally answered, as if it were burnt. It has neither date nor superscription.

CLARISSA,

SAY not all the blame and all the punishment is yours. I am as much blamed, and as much punished, as you are; yet am more innocent. your obstinacy is equal to any other person's passion, blame not your Brother. We judged right, that Hannah carried on your correspondencies. Now she is, gone,

. I.

on-

her

on-

de,

gi-

his

not

her

en)

age

my ted

nuc

my

or

ver

, 1

in,

VE.

et-

me

afe

be

her

is

ou-

nen

on,

is, ne, gone, and you cannot write [We think you cannot] to Miss Howe, nor she to you, without our know-ledge, one cause of uneafiness and jealousy is over.

I had no dislike to Hannah. I did not tell her so; because Somebody was within hearing when she defired to pay her duty to me at going. I gave her a caution, in a raised voice, To take care, where-ever she went to live next, if there were any young Ladies, how she made parties, and affisted in clandestine correspondencies:—But I slid two guineas into her hand. Nor was I angry to hear that you were still more bountiful to her-So much for Hannah.

I don't know what to write, about your answering that man of violence. What can you think of it, that fuch a family as ours, should have such a rod held over it?—For my part, I have not owned that I know you have corresponded: By your last boldness to me [An aftonishing one it was, to pursue before Mr. Solmes the subject that I was forced to break from above-stairs!] you may, as far I know, plead, that you had my countenance for your correspondence with him; and so add to the uneafiness between your Father and me. You was once all my comfort, Clarissa: You made all my hardships tolerable:-But now !-However, nothing, it is plain, can move you; and I will fay no more on that head: For you are under your Father's discipline now; and he will neither be prescribed to, nor entreated.

I should have been glad to see the Letter you tell me of, as I saw the rest:—You say, both honour and prudence forbid you to shew it me.—O Clarissa! what think you of receiving Letters that honour and prudence forbid you to shew to a Mother!—But it is not for me to see it, if you would chuse to shew it me. I will not be in your secret. I will not know that you did correspond. And, as to an Answer, take your own methods. But let him know it will be the last you will write. And, if you do write,

I won't

L

vel

Fa

it !

has

Ac

10

6 0

& t

6 h

¢ p e t

6 p

+ e

6 d

4 e

6 p

1 a

4 A

4 m

4 a

6 a

· p

C N

e n

and it v forg

I won't fee it: So feal it up (if you do) and give it Shorey; and she—Yet do not think I give you licence to write.

We will be upon no conditions with him, nor will you be allowed to be upon any. Your Father and Uncles would have no patience were he to come. What have you to do to oblige bim with your refusal of Mr. Solmes?—Will not That refusal be to give bim hope? And while he has any, can we be easy or free from his insults? Were even your Brother in fault, as that fault cannot be conquered, is a Sister to carry on a correspondence that shall endanger her Brother? But your Father has given his sanction to your Brother's dislikes, and they are now your Father's dislikes, and my dislikes, your Uncles and every body's !- No matter to whom owing.

As to the rest, you have by your obstinacy put it out of my power to do any-thing for you. Your Father takes upon himself to be answerable for all consequences. You must not therefore apply to me for favour. I shall endeavour to be only an observer; Happy, if I could be an unconcerned one!—While I had power, you would not let me use it as I would have used it. Your Aunt has been forced to engage not to interfere but by your Father's direction. You'll have severe trials. If you have any favour to hope for, it must be from the mediation of your Uncles. And yet I believe, they are equally determined: For they make it a principle! [Alas! they never had children!] that that Child, who in Marriage is not governed by her Parents, is to be given up as a lost creature.

I charge you, let not this Letter be found. Burn it. There is too much of the Mother in it, to a Daughter fo unaccountably obstinate.

for you. But you can do every-thing for yourself.

Now, my dear, to proceed with my melancholy narrative.

L. I.

ve it

ence

Will

and me.

fusal

give

y or

r in ifter

her

n to

Fa-

and

ut it

Our

all

me

ver;

ile I

ould

rage

l'uc

for,

And

they

n!]

by urn

to a

ning

After this Letter, you will believe, that I could have very little hopes, that an application directly to my Father would stand me in any stead: But I thought it became me to write, were it but to acquit myfelf to myself, that I have left nothing unattempted that has the least likelihood to restore me to his favour. Accordingly I wrote to the following effect :

I prefume not, I fay, to argue with my Papa; I only beg his mercy and indulgence in this one point, on which depends my present and perhaps my future happiness; and beseech him not to reprobate his child for an avertion which it is not in her power to conquer. I beg, that I may not be facrificed to ' projects, and remote contingencies. I complain of the diffraces I fuffer in this banishment from his ' presence, and in being confined to my chamber. In f every-thing but this one point, I promife implicit duty and refignation to his will. I repeat my offers of a Single Life; and appeal to him, whether I have ever given him cause to doubt my word. I beg to be admitted to His, and to my Mamma's prefence, and that my conduct may be under their own eye: And this with the more earneftness, as I have too much reason to believe, that frares are laid for me; and tauntings and revilings used on purpose to make a handle of my words against me, when I am not permitted to speak in my own defence. I conclude with hoping, that my Brother's instigations may , not rob an unhappy child of her Father.'

This is the Answer, sent without superscription, and unfealed, altho' by Betty Barnes, who delivered it with an air, as if the knew the contents, Wednesday.

Write, perverse girl; but with all the indignation that your disobedience deserves. To desire to be forgiven a fault you own, and yet resolve to persevere rloa fter

f.

LET

poffi

pen,

inte

his 6

then

" m

I

H

in in e pe

" fq

6 in

tr tr

· a re Si

· A

al

I

ti ti

· re

( gr

· to pre

offe

he i

ftra

tag

defi

lofe

am

eye

fou

H

in, is a boldness, no more to be equalled, than passed over. It is my authority you defy. Your reflections upon a Brother, that is an honour to us all, deserve my utmost resentment. I see how light all Relationship sits upon you. The cause I guess at, too. I cannot bear the resections that naturally arise from this consideration. Your behaviour to your too indulgent, and too fond Mother—But, I have no patience—Continue banished from my presence, undutiful as you are, till you know how to conform to my will. Ingrateful creature? Your Letter but upbraids me for my past indulgence. Write no more to me, till you can distinguish better; and till you are convinced of your duty to

A justly incensed Father.

This angry Letter was accompanied with one from my Mother, unfealed, and unfuperscribed also. Those who take so much pains to confederate every one against me, I make no doubt, obliged her to bear her testimony against the poor girl.

My Mother's Letter being a repetition of some of the severe things that passed between herself and me, of which I have already informed you, I shall not need to give you the contents—Only thus far, that she also praises my Brother, and blames me for my freedoms with him.

LETTER XXVI.

Miss CLARISSA HARLOWE, To Miss Howe.

Thursday Morn. March 9.

I Have another Letter from Mr. Lovelace, altho'l had not answered his former.

This man, some how or other, knows every-thing that passes in our family. My confinement; Hannah's dismission; and more of the resentments and resolutions of my Father, Uncles, and Brother, than I can possibly

LET. 26. CLARISSA HARLOWE.

possibly know, and almost as soon as the things happen, which he tells me of. He cannot come at thefe intelligencies fairly.

He is excessively uneasy upon what he hears; and his expressions both of Love to me, and Resentment to them, are very fervent. He folicits me, 'To engage 'my honour to him, Never to have Mr. Solmes.'

I think I may fairly promise him that I will not. He begs, That I will not think he is endeavouring to make to himself a merit at any man's expence, fince he hopes to obtain my favour on the foot of his own; nor that he feeks to intimidate me into a confideration for him. But declares, that the treatment he meets with from my family is of fuch 'a nature, that he is perpetually reproached for not resenting it; and that as well by Lord M. and Lady Sarah, and Lady Betty, as by all his other friends:

And if he must have no hope from me, he cannot

'answer for what his despair will make him do.'

Indeed, he fays, his Relations, the Ladies particularly, advise him to have recourse to a legal 'remedy: But how, he asks, can a man of honour go to Law for verbal abuses given by people entitled ' to wear fwords?' You fee, my dear, that my Mother feems as apprehensive of mischief as myself; and has indirally offered to let Shorey carry my Answer to the Letter he fent me before.

He is full of the favour of the Ladies of his family to me: To whom, nevertheless, I am personally a stranger; except that once I saw Miss Patty Montague at Mrs. Knollys's.

It is natural, I believe, for a person to be the more defirous of making new friends, in proportion as she loses the favour of old ones: Yet had I rather appear amiable in the eyes of my own Relations, and in your eyes, than in those of all the world besides .- But these four Ladies of his family have fuch excellent characters.

affed ions erve

L. I.

ioncanthis

ent, cel as will. me till

nced

r. rom

hole one bear

e of me,

not that my

l'or

hing ah's

olucaff libly

L

· t 6 ]

6 r

· k

6 ji

6 b

6 b tt t B

· th ge

fe cl.

6 th

fir

to to

an

th:

rate.

of on and r

less se

tents

vexat

I

T

racters, that one cannot but with to be thought well of by them. Cannot there be a way to find out by Mrs. Fortescue's means, or by Mr. Hickman, who has some knowledge of Lord M. [covertly, however] what their opinions are of the prefent fituation of things in our family; and of the little likelihood there is, that ever the alliance once approved of by them, can take effect? honor with your 1 :15

Locannot, for my own party think fo well of my. felf, as to imagine, that they can wish their Kinsman to persevere in his views with regard to me, through fuch contempts and discouragements .- Not that it would concern me, should they advise him to the contrary. By my Lord's figning Mr. Lovelace's former Letter; by Mr. Lovelace's affurances of the continued favour of all his Relations; and by the report of others; I feem still to stand high in their favour: But, methinks, I should be glad to have this confirmed to me, as from themselves, by the lips of an indifferent person; and the rather, as they are known to put a value upon their alliance, because of their fortunes and family; and take it amiss (as they have reason) to be included by ours in contempt thrown upon their Kinsman. 130000 11000

Curiofity at present is all my motive: Nor will there ever, I hope, be a stronger, notwithstanding your questionable throbs- Even were the merits of Mr. Lovelace much greater than they are. and in de is full of the favou on the ladies of his family I HAVE answered his Letters. If he takes me at my word, I shall need to be the less folicitous for the opinions of his Relations in my favour: And yet one would be glad to be well thought of by the worthy.

This is the fubstance of my Letter: Lexpress my furprise at his knowing (and lo "early) all that maffes here. you to sove and Laffure him, 'That were there not fuch a man in the world as himself, I would not have Mr. Solmes. racters.

I tell

well

t by

Who

ver

n of boon f by

my.

Iman

ough

nat it

the s forthe

v the their

have

v the they cause

Is (28

con-

r will

nding

its of

at my

e opi-

et one

rthy.

nd lo

nan in olmes.

I tell

I tell him, That to return, as I understand he does. defiances for defiances, to my Relations, is far from being a proof with me, either of his politeness, or of the confideration he pretends to have for me.

That the moment I hear he vifits any of my friends without their consent, I will make a resolution never to see him more, if I can help it.

I apprife him, 'That I am connived at in fending this Letter (altho' no one has feen the contents) provided it shall be the last I will ever write to him: That I had more than once told him, that the Single Life was my choice; and this before Mr. Solmes was introduced as a vifitor in our fa-'mily: That Mr. Wyerley, and other gentlemen, 'knew it to be my choice, before himself was acquainted with any of us: That I had never been ' induced to receive a line from him on the subject, but that I thought he had not acted ungenerously by my Brother; and yet had not been so handsomely treated by my friends, as he might have expected a But that had he even my friends on his fide, I ' should have very great objections to him, were I to get over my choice of a Single Life, fo really preferable to me as it is; and that I should have de-' clared as much to him, had I regarded him as more than a common visitor. On all these accounts, I defire, that the one more Letter, which I will allow him to deposit in the usual place, may be the very last; and That only, to acquaint me with his acquiescence that it shall be so; at least till happier times.

This last I put in that he may not be quite desperate. But if he take me at my word, I shall-be rid WY !

of one of my tormentors.

I have promised to lay before you all his Letters, and my Answers: I repeat that promise: And am the les solicitous for that reason, to amplify upon the contents of either. But I cannot too often express my vexation, to be driven to such streights and difficulties,

the

G

thi

fo,

tin

did

ge

Wa

kn

hir

litt

the use

An

op

you

rig

the

tro

mo

WC

fch

let

here at home, as oblige me to answer Letters (from a man I had not absolutely intended to encourage, and to whom I had really great objections) filled as his are with such warm protestations, and written to me with a spirit of expectation.

For, my dear, you never knew so bold a supposer. As commentators find beauties in an author, to which the author perhaps was a stranger; so he sometimes compliments me in high strains of gratitude for favours, and for a consideration, which I never designed him; insomuch that I am frequently under a necessity of explaining away the attributed goodness to him, which if I shewed, I should have the less opinion of myself.

In short, my dear, like a restiff horse (as I have heard described by sportsmen) he pains one's hands, and half disjoints one's arms, to rein him in. And, when you see his Letters, you must form no judgment upon them, till you have read my Answers. If you do, you will indeed think you have cause to attribute self-deceit, and throbs, and glows to your friend—And yet, at other times, the contradictory creature complains, that I shew him as little favour, and my friends as much inveteracy, as if in the Recounter betwixt my Brother and him, he had been the aggressor; and as if the catastrophe had been as fatal, as it might have been.

If he had a defign by this conduct (sometimes complaining of my shyness, at others exulting in my imaginary favours) to induce me at one time to acquiesce with his compliments; at another to be more complaisant for his complaints; and if the contradiction be not the effect of his inattention and giddiness; I shall think him as deep and as artful (too probably, as practifed) a creature, as ever lived; and were I to be sure of it, should hate him, if possible, worse than I do Solmes.

But enough for the present of a creature so very various.

LET.

. I.

rom

age,

n to fer.

nich

mes

urs,

ım;

ex-

h if

ave

ids,

nd,

ent

you

ute

And

mnds

vixt

and ght

m-

my

ac-

ore

tra-

ldi-

ro-

and

ole,

ery

T.

f.

LETTER XXVII.

Miss Howe, To Miss CLARISSA HARLOWE.

Thursday Night, March 9.

Have not patience with any of the people you are with. I know not what to advise you to do. How do you know, that you are not punishable for being the cause, tho' to your own loss, that the Will of your Grandfather is not complied with?—Wills are sacred things, child. You see, that they, even they, think so, who imagine they suffer by a Will, thro' the distinction paid you in it.

I allow of all your noble reasonings for what you did at the time: But since such a charming, such a generous instance of filial duty is to go thus unrewarded, why should you not resume?

Your Grandfather knew the family-failing. He knew what a noble spirit you had to do good. He himself perhaps [Excuse me, my dear] had done too little in his life-time; and therefore he put it in your power to make up for the desects of the whole family. Were it to me, I would resume it. Indeed I would.

You will fay, you cannot do it, while you are with them. I don't know that. Do you think they can use you worse than they do? And is it not your right? And do they not make use of your own generosity to oppress you? Your Uncle Harlowe is one Trustee; your Cousin Morden is the other: Insist upon your right to your Uncle; and write to your Cousin Morden about it. This, I dare say, will make them alter their behaviour to you.

Your infolent Brother—what has he to do to controul you?—Were it me [I wish it were me for one month, and no more] I'd shew him the difference. I would be in my own mansion, pursuing my charming schemes, and making all around me happy. I would set up my own chariot. I would visit them when Vol. I.

LET

· Lo

· ga

St

fo.

· bis gi.

an

6 21

· Im

fm

e pe

m

· Lo

Wa

Wa

· fee

gl

mı

tu!

'al

W W

fur

ab.

fpl

fai

21

ou ou

for

'the

at gre

for

hir

to

len

6

they deserved it. But when my Brother and Sister gave themselves airs, I would let them know, that I was their Sister, and not their Servant: And, if that did not do, I would shut my gates against them; and bid them go, and be company for each other.

It must be confessed, however, that this Brother and Sifter of yours, judging as fuch narrow spirits will ever judge, have some reason for treating you as they do. It must have long been a mortification to them (fet disappointed Love on her side, and avarice on his, out of the question) to be so much eclipsed by a younger-Sister. Such a Son in a family, where there are none but faint twinklers, how could they bear it! Why, my dear, they must look upon you as a prodigy among them: And prodigies, you know, tho' they obtain our Admiration, never attract our Love. The distance between you and them is immense. eyes ake to look up at you. What shades does your full day of merit cast upon them! Can you wonder then, that they should embrace the first opportunity that offered, to endeavour to bring you down to their level?

Depend upon it, my dear, you will have more of it, and more still, as you bear it.

As to this odious Solmes, I wonder not at your aversion to him. It is needless to say any thing to you, who have so sincere an antipathy to him, to strengthen your dislike: Yet, who can resist her own talents? One of mine, as I have heretofore said, is to give an ugly likeness. Shall I indulge it?—I will. And the rather, as, in doing so, you will have my opinion in justification of your Aversion to him, and in approbation of a steadiness that I ever admired and must for ever approve of in your temper.

I was twice in this wretch's company. At one of the times your Lovelace was there. I need not mention to you, who have fuch a pretty curiofity (tho' at prefent, only a curiofity, you know) the · unspeakable difference. Love-

fter

at 1

that

and

ther

will

hey

hem

e on by a

here

it!

digy

they

The

heir

your

nder

nity

heir

re of

your

you,

then

nts!

e an d the n in pro-

mut

ne of

not

·io/ity

) the

ove-

Lovelace entertained the company in his lively gay way, and made every-body laugh at one of his Stories. It was before this creature was thought of for you. Solmes laughed too. It was, however, his laugh: For his first three years, at least, I imagine, must have been one continual fit of crying; and his muscles have never yet been able to recover arisible tone. His very smile [You never saw him smile, I believe; never at least gave him cause to smile] is so little natural to his features, that it appears in him as hideous as the grin of a man in malice.

'I took great notice of him, as I do of all the noble Lords of the creation, in their peculiarities; and was difgusted, nay, shocked at him, even then. I was glad, I remember, on that particular occasion, to see his strange features recovering their natural gloominess; tho' they did this but slowly, as if the muscles which contributed to his distortions, had turned upon rufty fprings.

'What a dreadful thing must even the Love of such a Husband be! For my part, were I his wise! (But what have I done to myself, to make but such a supposition?) I should never have comfort but in his absence, or when I was quarrelling with him. A splenetic woman, who must have somebody to find fault with, might indeed be brought to endure such a wretch: The sight of him would always surnish out the occasion, and all her servants, for That reason, and for That only, would have cause to bless their master. But how grievous and apprehensive a thing must it be for his wise, had she the least degree of delicacy to catch herself in having done something to oblige him?

'So much for his person: As to the other half of him, he is said to be an infinuating, creeping mortal to any-body he hopes to be a gainer by: An inso-lent, over-bearing one, where he has no such views:

Si

of

B

ch

F

fe

to ke

pr

pa

20 10 ob

fli

bu

tri

fir

th

in

lo

ati

WI

go

us

me

op

And is not this the genuine spirit of meanness? He is reported to be spiteful and malicious, even to the whole family of any fingle person who has once disobliged him; and to his own relations most of all, I am told, that they are none of them such wretches himself. This may be one reason why he is for

' difinheriting them.

'My Kitty, from one of his domestics, tells me, that his tenants hate him: And that he never had a fervant who spoke well of him. Vilely suspicious of their wronging him (probably from the badness of ' his own heart) he is always changing.

'His pockets, they fay, are continually cramed with keys: So that when he would treat a guest (A friend he has not out of your family) he is half as long puzzling which is which, as his niggardly treat fetches it himself. Nor has he much trouble in fetches it himself. Nor has he much trouble in doing so; for he has very few visitors—only those, whom business or necessity brings: For a gentleman who can help it, would rather be benighted, than put up at his house,'

Yet this is the man they have found out (for confiderations as fordid as those he is governed by) for a Husband, that is to say, for a Lord and Master, for Miss Clarissa Harlowe!

But perhaps, he may not be quite so miserable as he is represented. Characters extremely good, or extremely bad, are seldom justly given. Favour for a person will exalt the one, as disfavour will sink the other. But your Uncle Anthony has told my Mother, who objected to his coveruousness, that it was intended to tie him up, as he called it, to your own terms; which would be with a hempen, rather than a matrimonial cord, I dare say. But, is not this a plain indication, that even his own recommenders think him a mean creature; and that he must be articled with—perhaps for necessaries? But enough, and too much, of such

LET. 27. a wretch as this !- You must not have him, my dear -That I am clear in-tho' not so clear, how you will be able to avoid it, except you affert the independence to which your Estate gives you a title.

HERE my Mother broke in upon me. She wanted to fee what I had written. I was filly enough to read Solmes's character to her.

L. I.

? He

o the e dif-

all. I tches

is for

s me,

had a

ous of

els of

amed eft (A

lf as treat

ways

e in hole,

ntie-

hted,

·Con-

for 1

, for

le as

or ex-

for a c the

ther,

ended

hich

onial

tion,

mean

haps

fuch

retch

She owned that the man was not the most desirable of men; and that he had not the happiest appearance: But what, said she, is person in a man? And I was chidden for fetting you against complying with your Then followed a lecture upon the pre-Father's will. ference to be given in favour of a man who took care to discharge all his obligations to the world, and to keep all together, in opposition to a spendthrist or profligate: A fruitful subject you know, whether any particular person be meant by it, or not.

Why will these wise Parents, by saying too much against the persons they dislike, put one upon defending them? Lovelace is not a spendthrift; owes not obligations to the world; though, I doubt not, profligate enough. Then, putting one upon doing fuch but common justice, we must needs be prepossessed, truly !- And fo perhaps we are put upon Curiofities first, that is to fay, how such a one or his friends may think of one:—And then, but too probably, comes in a distinguishing preference, or something that looks exceedingly like it.

My Mother charged me at last, to write that fide over again.—But excuse me, my good Mamma! I would not have the character loft upon any confideration; fince my vein ran freely into it: And I never wrote to please myself, but I pleased you. A very good reason why-We have but one mind between us-Only, that sometimes you are a little too grave, methinks; I, no doubt, a little too flippant in your opinion.

This

· B

67

6 E

i it

H

if 1

in (

the

ma

mu

fior

fiti

to 1

lefs

Ch

nef

· d

· to

· F

jud

WO

her

6 C · W

· W

" C

· fe

me

bef

I

This difference in our tempers, however, is probably the reason that we love one another so well, that in the words of Norris, no third Love can come in betwixt. Since each, in the other's eye, having fome. thing amis, and each loving the other well enough to bear being told of it (and the rather perhaps as neither wishes to mend it); this takes off a good deal from that rivalry which might encourage a little (if not a great deal of that latent Spleen, which in time might rife into Envy, and That into Ill-will. So, my dear, if This be the case, let each keep her fault, and much good may do her with it, fay I: For there is Conffi. tution in both to plead for it: And what an Hero or Heroine must he or she be, who can conquer a Constitutional fault? Let it be Avarice, as in some I dare not name: Let it be Gravity, as in my best friend: Or let it be Flippancy, as in-I need not fay whom.

It is proper to acquaint you, that I was obliged to comply with my Mother's Curiofity [My Mother has her share, her full share, of Curiofity, my dear and to let her fee here-and-there some passages in your

Letters-

I am broken in upon—But I will tell you by-andby what passed between my Mother and me on this occasion-And the rather, as she had her GIRL, her favourite HICKMAN, and your LOVELACE, all at once in her eye, in her part of the conversation. 0 0

Thus it was.

I cannot but think, Nancy, faid she, after all, that there is a little hardship in Miss Harlowe's case: And yet (as her Mother fays) it is a grating thing to have a child, who was always noted for her duty in fmaller points, to stand in opposition to her parents will, in the greater: yea, in the greatest of all. And ' now to middle the matter between both, it is pity, that the man they favour has not that fort of merit which a person of a mind so delicate as that of Miss · Harlowe

prone in ome-

gh to

ither

from

not a night

dear,

nuch

nfti-

10 0

Con-

dare

10

" Harlowe might reasonably expect in a Husband.— Butthen, this man is surely preferable to a Libertine:

· To a Libertine too, who has had a duel with her own

Brother: Fathers and Mothers must think so, were it not for that circumstance-And it is strange if they ' do not know best.'

And so they must, thought I, from their experience, if no little dirty views give them also that preposition in one man's favour, which they are so apt to censure their Daughters for having in another's—And if, as I may add in your case, they have no creeping, old, musty Uncle Anthony's to strengthen their prepossessions, as he does my Mother's—Poor, creeping, positive soul, what has such an old Bachelor as he to do, to prate about the Duties of Children to Parents; unless he had a notion that Parents owe some to their Children? But your Mother, by her indolent meekness, let me call it, has spoiled all the three Brothers.

"But you see, child, proceeded my Mother, what a different behaviour MINE is to You. I recommend to you one of the soberest, yet politest, men in · England-

I think little of my Mother's politest, my dear. She judges of honest Hickman for her Daughter, as she would have done, I suppose, twenty years ago, for herself.

Of a good family, continued my Mother; a fine, clear, and improving Estate [A prime consideration

'with my Mother, as well as with some other folks, whom you know]: And I beg and I pray you to en'courage him: At least, not to use him the worse, for his being so obsequious to you.'

Yes indeed! To use him kindly, that he may treat me familiarly—But distance to the men-wretches is best—I say.

'Yet all will hardly prevail upon you to do as I would have you. What would you fay, were I to has and your andthis

her

l at

that

y in ents And

nerit Miss

6 ]

6

6 ]

6 j

if 1

in

the

ma

mu

fio

fiti

to lefs

Ch

nel

e d

e t

· I

jud

WO

her

6 C

· V

. C

me

bef

« V

· Harlowe

This difference in our tempers, however, is probably the reason that we love one another so well, that in the words of Norris, no third Love can come in betwixt. Since each, in the other's eye, having fomething amis, and each loving the other well enough to bear being told of it (and the rather perhaps as neither wishes to mend it); this takes off a good deal from that rivalry which might encourage a little (if not a great deal of that latent Spleen, which in time might rife into Envy, and That into Ill-will. So, my dear, if This be the case, let each keep her fault, and much good may do her with it, fay I: For there is Confi. tution in both to plead for it: And what an Hero or Heroine must he or she be, who can conquer a Con. stitutional fault? Let it be Avarice, as in some I dare not name: Let it be Gravity, as in my best friend: Or let it be Flippancy, as in—I need not fay whom.

It is proper to acquaint you, that I was obliged to comply with my Mother's Curiofity [My Mother has her share, her full share, of Curiosity, my dear and to let her fee here-and-there some passages in your

Letters-

I am broken in upon—But I will tell you by-andby what passed between my Mother and me on this occasion-And the rather, as she had her GIRL, her favourite HICKMAN, and your LOVELACE, all at once in her eye, in her part of the conversation.

0 0

Thus it was.

I cannot but think, Nancy, faid she, after all, that there is a little hardship in Miss Harlowe's case: And yet (as her Mother fays) it is a grating thing to have a child, who was always noted for her duty in s smaller points, to stand in opposition to her parents will, in the greater: yea, in the greatest of all. And ' now to middle the matter between both, it is pity, that the man they favour has not that fort of merit which a person of a mind so delicate as that of Miss

L. [.

pro-

that

ne in

ome-

gh to

ither

from

not a night

dear,

nuch

nfti-

10 01

Con-

dare

10

d to

has

and your

and-

this

her

l at

that

afe:

g to y in

ents

And

oity,

rerit

Miss

· Harlowe might reasonably expect in a Husband .-

Butthen, this man is surely preferable to a Libertine:

· To a Libertine too, who has had a duel with her own

Brother: Fathers and Mothers must think so, were

it not for that circumstance—And it is strange if they

" do not know best."

And so they must, thought I, from their experience, if no little dirty views give them also that preposition in one man's favour, which they are so apt to censure their Daughters for having in another's—And if, as I may add in your case, they have no creeping, old, musty Uncle Anthony's to strengthen their prepossessions, as he does my Mother's—Poor, creeping, positive soul, what has such an old Bachelor as he to do, to prate about the Duties of Children to Parents; unless he had a notion that Parents owe some to their Children? But your Mother, by her indolent meekness, let me call it, has spoiled all the three Brothers.

But you see, child, proceeded my Mother, what a different behaviour MINE is to You. I recommend to you one of the soberest, yet politest, men in

' England-'

I think little of my Mother's politest, my dear. She judges of honest Hickman for her Daughter, as she would have done, I suppose, twenty years ago, for herself.

'Of a good family, continued my Mother; a fine, clear, and improving Estate [A prime consideration

'with my Mother, as well as with some other folks, 'whom you know]: And I beg and I pray you to en-

' courage him: At least, not to use him the worse,

' for his being so obsequious to you.'

Yes indeed! To use him kindly, that he may treat me familiarly—But distance to the men-wretches is best—I say.

'Yet all will hardly prevail upon you to do as I would have you. What would you fay, were I to

few

you

lati

the s

I ha

thar

any

to li

frien

Clar

Lad

muf

as I

whe

well

too,

Ano

not:

and .

angr

the J

or w

long

in yie

You

will

prefe

the l produ

lowe

to an estab

the n

ment

least

I

1 treat you as Miss Harlowe's Father and Mother treat her?

. What would I fay, Madam !- That's eafily an. fwered. I would fay nothing. Can you think fuch ulage, and to such a young Lady, is to be borne? · Come, come, Nancy, be not so hasty: You have heard but one fide; and that there is more to be faid is plain, by your reading to me but parts of her

They are her Parents. They must know Letters. best. Miss Harlowe, as fine a child as she is, must · have done fomething, must have faid fomething

' (You know how they loved her) to make them treat her thus.

But if she should be blameless, Madam, how does ' your own supposition condemn them?'

Then came up Solmes's great Estate; his good management of it- A little too NEAR indeed, was the word !- [O how money-lovers, thought I, will palliate! Yet my Mother is a princes in spirit to this Solmes! What strange effects, added she, have Preproflession and Love upon young Ladies?

I don't know how it is, my dear; but people take high delight in finding out folks in Love. Curiofity begets Curiofity: I believe that's the thing.

She proceeded to praise Mr. Lovelace's person, and his qualifications natural and acquired: But then the would judge as Mathers will judge, and as Daughters are very loath to judge: - But could fay nothing in anfwer to your offer of living fingle; and breaking with him-if-if-[three or four If's the made of one good one, If that could be depended on.

But still obedience without referve, reason what I will, is the burden of my Mother's fong: And This, for my fake, as well as for yours.

I must needs say, that I think duty to Parents is 2 very meritorious excellence: But I bless God I have not your trials. We can all be good when we have no temptation nor provocation to the contrary :- But

few

few young persons (who can help themselves too as you can) would bear what you bear.

I will now mention all that is upon my mind, in relation to the behaviour of your Father and Uncle, and the rest of them, because I would not offend you: But I have now a higher opinion of my own sagacity, than ever I had, in that I could never cordially love any one of your family but yourself. I am not born to like them. But it is my duty to be sincere to my friend: And this will excuse her Anna Howe to Miss Clarissa Harlowe.

I ought indeed to have excepted your Mother; a Lady to be reverenced; and now to be pitied. What must have been her treatment, to be thus subjugated, as I may call it? Little did the good old Viscount think, when he married his darling, his only Daughter to so well-appearing a gentleman, and to her own liking too, that she would have been so much kept down. Another would call your Father a Tyrant, if I must not: All the world that know him, do call him so; and if you love your Mother, you should not be very angry at the world for taking that liberty.

Yet, after all, I cannot help thinking, that the is the less to be pitied, as she may be faid (be the Gout, or what will, the occasion of his moroseness) to have long behaved unworthy of her birth and fine qualities. in yielding fo much as fhe yields to enchroaching spirits You may confine the reflection to your Brother, if it will pain you to extend it]: and This for the take of preferving a temporary peace to herfelf; which was the less worth endeavouring to preserve, as it always produced a strength in the will of others, and was followed by a weakness in her own, which subjected her to an arbitrariness that of course grew, and became established, upon her patience. - And now to give up the most deferving of her children (against her judgment) a facrifice to the ambition and felfishness of the least deserving!-But I sly from this subject-having,

for

L. I.

ther

an-

uch

e?

ave

faid

her

won

nust

ning

reat

does

ma-

the

ate!

es !]

fion

take

fity

and

The

pters

an-

with one is a

But few

LI

pa

aw

CO

fay

A

Fo

fo

lef

bet

the

. 0

6 il

t t wri

-[

a.V

fam

WOU

aga

that lof

that

Y

fensi

25 1

In

I fear, said too much to be forgiven—and yet much less than is in my heart to say upon the over-meek subject.

Mr. Hickman is expected from London this evening. I have defired him to enquire after Lovelace's life and conversation in town. If he has not enquired, I shall be very angry with him. Don't expect a very good account of either. He is certainly an intriguing wretch, and full of inventions.

Upon my word, I most heartily despise that Sex! I wish they would let our Fathers and Mothers alone; teazing them to teaze us with their golden promises, and protestations, and settlements, and the rest of their oftentatious nonfense. How charmingly might you and I live together, and despise them all! But to be cajoled, wire-drawn, and enfnared, like filly birds, into a state of bondage, or vile subordination: To be courted as Princesses for a few weeks, in order to be treated as Slaves for the rest of our lives-Indeed, my dear, as you say of Solmes, I cannot endure them !-But for your relations [friends no more will I call them, unworthy as they are even of the other name! ] to take fuch a wretch's price as That; and to the cutting of all reversions from his own family!—How mult a mind but commonly just resist such a measure!

Mr. Hickman shall found Lord M. upon the subject you recommended. But beforehand, I can tell you what he and what his Sister will say, when they are sounded. Who would not be proud of such a relation as Miss Clarissa Harlowe?—Mrs. Fortescue told me, that they are all your very great admirers.

If I have not been clear enough in my advice about what you shall do, let me say, that I can give it in one word: It is only by re-urging you to RESUME. If you do, all the rest will follow.

We are told here, that Mrs. Norton, as well as your Aunt Hervey, has given her opinion on the implicit fide of the question. If she can think, that the part

L. I.

nuch

meek

even-ace's

ired,

very

guing x! I

one;

rifes,

their

you

to be

into

o be

to be

, my

n!-

hem,

take

g off uft a bject

you

ation

about it in

UME.

ell as

e im-

at the part

part she has had in your education, and your own admirable talents and acquirements, are to be thrown away upon such a worthless creature as Solmes, I could heartily quarrel with her. You may think I say this to lessen your regard for the good woman. And perhaps not wholly without cause, if you do. For, to own the truth, methinks, I don't love her so well as I should do, did you love her so apparently less, that I could be out of doubt, that you love me better.

Your Mother tells you, 'That you will have great trials: That you are under your Father's dif-' cipline.'-The word is enough for me to despise them who gave occasion for its use .- ' That it is out of her power to help you! And again: 'That 'if you have any favour to hope for, it must be by the mediation of your Uncles.' I suppose you will write to the Oddities, fince you are forbid to fee them -But can it be, that such a Lady, such a Sister, such a Wife, such a Mother, has no influence in her own family? Who, indeed, as you fay, if this be fo, would marry, that can live fingle? My choler is again beginning to rife. RESUME, my dear:-And that is all I will give myself time to say further, left loffend you when I cannot ferve you. - Only this, that I am

Your truly affectionate Friend and Servant, ANNA HOWE

LETTER XXVIII.

Miss CLARISSA HARLOWE, To Miss Howe.

Friday, March 10.

YOU will permit me, my dear, to touch upon a few passages in your last Letter, that affect me sensibly.

In the first place, you must allow me to say, low as I am in spirits, that I am very angry with you for

I 6 your

C

n

k

a ta

0 ti

tı

N

f

n

tl

fi

tl

0 0

a

W

I

y

0

Father and Mother, and on the memory of my Father and Mother, and on the memory of my Grandfather. Nor, my dear, does your own Mother always escape the keen edge of your vivacity. One cannot one's felf forbear to write or speak freely of those who love and honour, when grief from imagined hard treatment wrings the heart: But it goes against one to hear any-body else take the same liberties. Then you have so very strong a manner of expression where you take a distaste, that when passion has subsided, and I come (upon resection) to see by your severity what I have given occasion for, I cannot help condemning myself.

But least of all can I bear that you should resect upon my Mother. What my dear, if her meekness should not be rewarded? Is the want of reward, or the want even of a grateful acknowledgment, a reason for us to dispense with what we think our duty? They were my Father's lively spirits that first made him an interest in her gentle bosom. They were the fame spirits turned inward, as I have heretofore obferved (a), that made him so impatient when the cruel malady feized him. He always loved my Mother: And would not Love and PITY, excusably, nay loudably, make a good Wife (who was an hourly witness of his pangs, when labouring under a paroxyfm, and his paroxyfms becoming more and more frequent, as well as more and more severe) give up her own will, her own likings, to oblige a Husband, thus afflicted, whose love for her was unquestionable! -And if fo, was it not too natural [Human nature is not perfect, my dear] that the Husband thus humoured by the Wife, should be unable to bear controul from any-body elfe? much less contradiction from his children?

If then you would avoid my highest displeasure, you must spare my Mother: And, surely, you will allow me, with her, to pity, as well as to love and honour my Father.

. I.

my

my

ther

One

y of

ined

linst

ties.

fion

lub-

your help

pon

ould

the

alon

uty!

nade

e the

ob-

the Mo-

ably,

urly.

rox-

nore

e up

and,

ble!

na-

thus bear

dicfure,

allow

I have no friend but you to whom I can appeal, to whom I dare complain. Unhappily circumstanced as I am, it is but too probable that I shall complain, because it is but too probable that I shall have more and more cause given me for complaint. But be it your part, if I do, to sooth my angry passions, and to soften my resentments; and this the rather, as you know what an influence your advice has upon me; and as you must also know, that the freedoms you take with my friends, can have no other tendency, but to weaken the sense of my duty to them, without answering any good end to myself.

I cannot help owning, however, that I am pleafed to have you join with me in opinion of the contempt which Solmes deserves from me. But yet, permit me to fay, that he is not quite so horrible a creature as you make him: As to his Person, I mean; for with regard to his Mind, by all I have heard, you have done him but justice: But you have such a talent at an ugly likeness, and such a vivacity, that they fometimes carry you out of verifimilitude. In short, my dear, I have known you, in more instances than one, fit down resolved to write all that wit, rather than strict justice, could suggest upon the given occation. Perhaps it may be thought, that I thould fay the less on this particular subject, because your dislike of him arises from love to me: But should it not be our aim to judge of ourselves, and of every-thing that affects us, as we may reasonably imagine other people would judge of us, and of our actions?

As to the advice you give, to refume my Estate, I am determined not to litigate with my Father, let what will be the consequence to myself. I may give you, at another time, a more particular answer to your reasonings on this subject: But, at present, will only observe, that it is my opinion, that Lovelace himfelf

Lie mid

LE

mo

rea

an

ma

3 (

WE

ac

WE

kn

ch

yo be

na

yo

as

ha

m lip

Wi

on

OV

CO

no

th

himself would hardly think me worth addressing, were he to know this to be my resolution. These Men, my dear, with all their flatteries, look forward to the PERMANENT. Indeed, it is fit they should. For Love must be a very soolish thing to look back upon, when it has brought persons born to affluence into indigence, and laid a generous mind under obligation and dependence.

You very ingeniously account for the Love we bear to one another, from the difference in our tempers, Lown, I should not have thought of That. There may possibly be something in it: But whether there be, or not, whenever I am cool, and give myself time to reflect, I will love you the better for the correction you give me, be as fevere as you will upon me. Spare me not therefore, my dear friend, whenever you think me in the least faulty. I love your agreeable raillery: You know I always did: Nor, however over-serious you think me, did I ever think you flippant, as you harshly call it. One of the first conditions of our mutual friendship was, that each should fay or write to the other whatever was upon her mind, without any offence to be taken: A condition, that is indeed indispensable in friendship.

I knew your Mother would be for implicit obedience in a child. I am forry my case is so circumstanced, that I cannot comply. It would be my duty to do so, if I could. You are indeed very happy, that you have nothing but your own agreeable, yet whimsical, humours to contend with, in the choice she invites you to make of Mr. Hickman. How happy should I be, to be treated with so much lenity!—I should blush to have my Mother say, that she begged and prayed me, and all in vain, to encourage a man so unexceptionable as Mr. Hickman.

Indeed, my beloved Miss Howe, I am ashamed to have your Mother say, with ME in her view, What frange effects have Prepossession and Love upon young

'young creatures of our Sex!' This touches me the more fensibly, because you yourself, my dear, are so ready to persuade me into it.

e

e

1, 0 ľ

3;

e

f

r

1

I should be very blameable to endeavour to hide any the least by as upon my mind, from you: And I cannot but fay—that this man—this Lovelace—is a man that might be liked well enough, if he bore fuch a character as Mr. Hickman bears; and even if there were hopes of reclaiming him. And further still I will acknowledge, that I believe it possible that one might be driven, by violent measures, step by step, as it were, into something that might be called-I don't know what to call it—A conditional kind of liking, or fo. But as to the word Love-justifiable and charming as it is in some cases (that is to say, in all the relative, in all the focial, and, what is still beyond both, in all our superior duties, in which it may be properly called divine); it has, methinks, in the narrow, circumscribed, selfish, peculiar sense, in which you apply it to me (the man too fo little to be approved of for his morals, if all that report fays of him be true) no pretty found with it. Treat me as freely. as you will in all other respects, I will love you, as I have faid, the better for your friendly freedom: But, methinks, that I could be glad, that you would not let this imputation pass so glibly from your pen, or your. lips, as attributable to one of your own Sex, whether I: be the person or not: Since the other must have a double triumph, when a person of your delicacy (armed with fuch contempts of them all, as you would have one think) can give up a friend, with an exultation over her weakness, as a filly, love-fick creature!

I could make some other observations upon the contents of your last two Letters; but my mind is not free enough at present. The occasions for the above stuck with me; and I could not help taking the earliest notice of them. To motion on the Having written to the end of my fecond fheet, I will

to f

me my

ing

favo

Bro ing

for ears

Bro

No-

not

ther

a lit

my .

have

voul

thou

very end

com

thou

him

con

jects

dear

tions

ever

and !

TR

must cafio

In

It

will close this Letter, and in my next acquaint you with all that has happened here fince my last.

LETTER XXIX.

Miss CLARISSA HARLOWE, To Miss Howe.

Saturday, March 11.

HAVE had fuch taunting messages, and such repeated avowals of ill offices, brought me from my Brother and Sifter, if I do not comply with their wills (delivered, too, with provoking fauciness by Betty Barnes) that I have thought it proper, before I entered upon my intended address to my Uncles, in pursuance of the hint given me in my Mother's Letter, to expostulate a little with them. But I have done it in such a manner, as will give you (if you please to take it as you have done some parts of my former Letters) great advantage over me. In short, you will have more cause than ever, to declare mefar gone in Love, if my reasons for the change of my style in these Letters, with regard to Mr. Lovelace, do not engage your more favourable opinion .-For I have thought proper to give them their own way; and, fince they will have it, that I have a preferable regard for Mr. Lovelace, I give them cause rather to confirm their opinion than doubt it.

These are my reasons in brief, for the alteration of my ftyle.

In the first place, they have grounded their principal argument for my compliance with their will, upon my acknowledgment that my heart is free; and so, supposing I give up no preferable person, my opposition has the look of downright obstinacy in their eyes; and they argue, that, at worst, my aversion to Solmes is an aversion that may be easily surmounted, and ought to be surmounted in duty to my Father, and for the promotion of samily-views.

Next, altho' they build upon this argument in order to

I.

u

h

n

11

y

ľ

n

t-

e.

u

y

t,

le-

of

.

n

2-

of 1-

1,

d

)-

ir

1,

1,

er

to

to filence me, they feem not to believe me, but treat me as disgracefully, as if I were in love with one of my Father's footmen:—So that my conditional willingness to give up Mr. Lovelace has procured me no favour.

In the next place, I cannot but think, that my Brother's antipathy to Mr. Lovelace is far from being well-grounded: The man's inordinate passion for the Sex is the crime that is always rung in my ears: And a very great one it is: But, does my Brother recriminate upon him thus in love to me?—No—His whole behaviour shews me, that That is not his principal motive, and that he thinks me rather in his way than otherwise.

It is then the call of justice, as I may say, to speak a little in favour of a man, who, altho' provoked by my Brother, did not do him all the mischief he could have done him, and which my Brother had endeavoured to do him. It might not be amiss therefore, I thought, to alarm them a little with an apprehension, that the methods they are a taking with me are the very reverse of those they should take to answer the end they defign by them. And after all, what is the compliment I make Mr. Lovelace, if I allow it to be thought, that I do really prefer him to fuch a man as him they terrify me with? Then, my Miss Howe [concluded I] accuses me of a tameness which subjects me to infults from my Brother: I will keep that dear friend in my eye; and for all these considerations, try what a little of her spirit will do-lit it ever so aukwardly upon me.

In this way of thinking, I wrote to my Brother and Sifter. This is my Letter to him.

TReated as I am treated, and, in a great measure, if not wholly, by your instigations, Brother, you must permit me to expostulate with you upon the occasion. It is not my intention to displease you in what

I am

is 1

two

im

anc

app

you

me

fule

pose

my

be i

con

that reaf

Sifte

that prin

versi

that us b

the d versi

cause

that

your

have

reaso

me,

look

amin

I

L

I

I am going to write: And yet I must deal freely with you. The occasion calls for it.

And permit me, in the first place, to remind you, That I am your Sister; and not your Servant; and that, therefore, the bitter revilings and passionate language brought me from you, upon an occasion in which you have no reason to prescribe to me, are neither worthy of my character to bear, nor of yours to offer.

Put the case, that I were to marry the man you dislike; and that he were not to make a polite or tender Husband, Is that a reason for you to be an unpolite and disobliging Brother?—Why must you, Sir, anticipate my missortunes, were such a case to happen?—Let me tell you plainly, that the man who could treat me as a Wise, worse than you of late have treated me as a Sister, must be a barbarous man indeed.

Ask yourself, I pray you, Sir, If you would thus have treated your Sister Bella, had she thought sit to receive the addresses of the man so much hated by you?—If not, let me caution you, my Brother, not to take your measures by what you think will be borne, but rather by what ought to be offered.

How would you take it, if you had a Brother, who, in a like case, were to act by you, as you do by me?—You cannot but remember what a Laconic answer you gave even to my Father, who recommended to you Miss Nelly D'Oily—You did not like her, were your words: And that was thought sufficient.

You must needs think, that I cannot but know to whom to attribute my disgraces, when I recollect my Father's indulgence to me, in permitting me to decline several offers; and to whom, that a common cause is endeavoured to be made, in favour of a man whose person and manners are more exceptionable than those of any of the gentlemen I have been permitted to resuse.

I offer

ith

ou,

nd

ate

in ei-

urs

you

en-

po-

Sir,

ap+

vho

late

nan

hus

t to

by

not

rne,

her,

u do

onic

om.

her,

nt.

w to

my

de

mon

man

able

per-

offer

I offer not to compare the two men together: Nor is there indeed the least comparison to be made between them. All the difference to the one's disadvantage, if I did, is but in one point—Of the greatest importance, indeed—But to whom of most importance?—To myself, surely, were I to encourage his application:—Of the least to you. Nevertheless, if you do not, by your strange politics, unite that man and me as joint sufferers in one cause, you shall find me as much resolved to renounce him, as I am to resule the other. I have made an overture to this purpose: I hope you will not give me reason to confirm my apprehensions, that it will be owing to you if it be not accepted.

It is a fad thing to have it to fay, without being conscious of ever having given you cause of offence, that I have in you a Brother, but not a Friend.

Perhaps you will not condescend to enter into the reasons of your late and present conduct with a soolish Sister. But if politeness, if civility, be not due to that character, and to my Sex, justice is.

Let me take the liberty further to observe, that the principal end of a young man's education at the University, is, to learn him to reason justly, and to subdue the violence of his passions. I hope, Brother, that you will not give room for any-body who knows us both, to conclude, that the Toilette has taught the one more of the latter doctrine, than the University has taught the other. I am truly forry to have cause to say, that I have heard it often remarked, that your uncontrouled passions are not a credit to your liberal education.

I hope, Sir, that you will excuse the freedom I have taken with you: You have given me too much reason for it, and you have taken much greater with me, without reason:—so, if you are offended, ought to look at the cause, and not at the effect:—Then examining yourself, that cause will cease, and there will not

L

B

ge

yo

on

M lac

Ye

tha

tre

ma

ger

he

mil

per

rav

tha

gen

tori

Col

ftu

tor

end

Sift

leav

allo

10 0

not be any-where a more accomplished gentleman than my Brother.

Sifterly affection, I do affure you, Sir, (unkindly as you have used me) and not the pertness which of late you have been so apt to impute to me, is my motive in this hint. Let me invoke your returning kindness, my only Brother! And give me cause, I befeech you, to call you my compassionate Friend. For I am, and ever will be,

Your affectionate Sifter,

CLARISSA HARLOWE,

This is my Brother's Answer.

To Miss CLARISSA HARLOWE.

I Know, there will be no end of your impertinent scribble, if I don't write to you. I write therefore: But, without entering into argument with such a conceited and pert preacher and questioner, it is, to forbid you to plague me with your quaint nonfense, I know not what Wit in a woman is good for, but to make her over-value herfelf, and despise every other person. Yours, Miss Pert, has set you above your duty, and above being taught or prescribed to, either by Parents, or any-body else-But go on, Miss: your mortification will be the greater; That's all, child. It shall, I affure you, if I can make it so, so long as you prefer that villainous Lovelace (who is justly hated by all your family) to every body. fee by your Letter now (what we too justly suspected before) most evidently we see, the hold he has got of your forward heart. But the stronger the hold, the greater must be the force (and you shall have enough of that) to tear such a miscreant from it. In me, notwithstanding your faucy lecturing, and your faucy reflections before, you are fure of a Friend, as well as of a Brother, if it be not your own fault. But

But if you will still think of such a wretch as that Lovelace, never expect either Friend or Brother in JA. HARLOWE.

I will now give you a copy of my Letter to my Sifter; with her Answer.

IN what, my dear Sifter, have I offended you, that instead of endeavouring to soften my Father's anger against me (as I am sure I should have done for you, had my unhappy case been yours) you should, in so hard-hearted a manner, join to aggravate not only his displeasure, but my Mother's against me. Make but my case your own, my dear Bella; and suppose you were commanded to marry Mr. Lovelace (to whom you are believed to have an antipathy) would you not think it a very grievous injunction?—Yet cannot your dislike to Mr. Lovelace be greater than mine is to Mr. Solmes. Nor are Love and Hatred voluntary passions.

ian

dly

of

no-

ing be-

For

WE.

ent

ere-

uch

t is,

nie.

but

ther

rout

ther

ifs:

all,

, fo

10 15

We

Cted

got

old,

have rour

, 25

ult.

But

In

My Brother may perhaps think it a proof of a manly spirit, to shew himself an utter stranger to the gentle passions. We have both heard him boast, that he never loved with distinction; and, having predominating passions, and checked in his first attempt, perhaps he never will. It is the less wonder then, raw from the College, so lately himself the tutored, that he should set up for a tutor, a prescriber to our gentle Sex, whose tastes and manners are differently formed: For what, according to his account, are Colleges, but classes of Tyrants, from the Upperitudents over the Lower, and from them to the Tutor?—That he, with fuch masculine passions, should endeavour to controul and bear down an unhappy Sifter, in a case where his antipathy, and, give me leave to fay, his ambition Once you would have allowed the latter to be his fault] can be gratified by to doing, may not be quite fo much to be wondered

but

teft

twe

nob

to a

the

felv

V

ami

dict

no f

to t thev

that

that

-A

has

Yet

cafe

the

fron

fo vi

oug

you

fion

His

ing,

take a fo

you

C

at—But that a Sister should give up the cause of a Sister, and join with him to set her Father and Mo. ther against her, in a case that might have been her own—Indeed, my Bella, this is not pretty in you.

There was a time that Mr. Lovelace was thought reclaimable, and when it was far from being deemed a censurable view to hope to bring back to the paths of virtue and honour, a man of his sense and understanding. I am far from wishing to make the experiment: But nevertheless will say, That if I have not a regard for him, the disgraceful methods taken to compel me to receive the addresses of such a man as Mr. Solmes, are enough to induce it.

Do you, my Sister; for one moment, lay aside all prejudice, and compare the two men in their births, their educations, their persons, their understandings, their manners, their air, and their whole deportments; and in their fortunes too, taking in reversions; and then judge of both: Yet, as I have frequently offered, I will live single with all my heart, if that will do.

I cannot thus live in displeasure and disgrace. I would, if I could, oblige all my friends. But will it be just, will it be honest, to marry a man I cannot endure? If I have not been used to oppose the will of my Father, but have always delighted to oblige and obey, judge of the strength of my antipathy, by the painful opposition I am obliged to make, and cannot help it.

Pity then, my dearest Bella, my Sister, my Friend, my Companion, my Adviser, as you used to be when I was happy, and plead for his ambition (Once and would have

Your ever-affectionate

Sud White the share CL. HARLOWE.

I.

0-

er

ht

ed

ths

er-

ri-

not

to

as

all

hs,

gs,

its;

and

itly

hat

I ll it

not

will

lige

, by

can-

end,

hen

VE.

To

To Miss CLARISSA HARLOWE.

Let it be pretty or not pretty in your wise opinion, I shall speak my mind, I will assure you, both of you and your conduct in relation to this detested Lovelace. You are a fond foolish girl with all your wisdom. Your Letter shews that enough in twenty places. And as to your cant of living single, nobody will believe you. This is one of your fetches to avoid complying with your duty, and the will of the most indulgent parents in the world, as yours have been to you, I am sure—Tho' now they see themselves finely requited for it.

We all, indeed, once thought your temper foft and amiable: But why was it? You never was contradicted before. You had always your own way. But no fooner do you meet with opposition in your wishes to throw yourself away upon a vile Rake, but you shew what you are. You cannot love Mr. Solmes! that's the pretence: But Sister, Sister, let me tell you, that is because Lovelace has got into your fond heart:—A wretch hated, justly hated, by us all; and who has dipped his hands in the blood of your Brother: Yet him you would make our relation, would you?

I have no patience with you, but for putting the case of my liking such a vile wretch as him. As to the encouragement you pretend he received formerly from all our family, it was before we knew him to be so vile: And the proofs that had such force upon us, ought to have had some upon you:—And would, had you not been a foolish forward girl; as on this occation every-body sees you are.

O how you run out in favour of the wretch!— His birth, his education, his person, his understanding, his manners, his air, his fortune—Reversions too taken in to augment the surfeiting catalogue! What a fond string of love-sick praises is here! And yet you would live single—Yes, I warrant!—when so many

dif

bu

the

cha

as

Di

2 11

wa:

hos pai

his

ftea

by

F

imp

fort

If t

qui

to g pro con

attr by t

And

brin

Such

line

him

Not

Pro

by f

her

may

MOU

S perf

many imaginary perfections dance before your dazzled eye!-But no more-I only defire, that you will not, while you feem to have fuch an opinion of your wit, think every one else a fool; and that you can at pleasure, by your whining flourishes, make us all dance after your lead.

Write as often as you will, this shall be the last answer or notice you shall have upon this subject from

ARABELLA HARLOWE.

I had in readiness a Letter for each of my Uncles; and meeting in the garden a fervant of my Uncle Harlowe, I gave them to him to deliver according to their respective directions. If I am to form a judg. ment by the Answers I have received from my Brother and Sifter, as above, I must not, I doubt, exped any good from those Letters. But when I have tried every expedient, I shall have the less to blame myself for, if any-thing unhappy should fall out. I will send you copies of both, when I shall see what notice they will be thought worthy of, if of any.

LETTER XXX.

Miss CLARISSA HARLOWE, To Miss Howe.

Sunday Night, March 12.

THIS man, this Lovelace, gives me great uneafiness. He is extremely bold and rash. He was this afternoon at our Church—In hopes to fee me, I suppose: And yet, if he had such hopes, his usual intelligence must have failed him.

Shorey was at church; and a principal part of her observation was upon his haughty and proud behaviour when he turned round in the pew where he fat to our family-pew. My Father and both my Uncles were there; so were my Mother and Sister. My Brother happily was not,—They all came home in disorder.

disorder. Nor did the congregation mind any-body but him; it being his first appearance there, since the unhappy Rencounter.

L. I.

zled

not,

Wit,

an at

s all

laft

bject

OWE.

cles;

Incle

ng to

udg-

Bro-

epect

tried

fend

they eali-

was ne, I

ufual

f her e fat

ncles

My

ne in

rder.

What did the man come for, if he intended to look challenge and defiance, as Shorey says he did, and as others, it seems, thought he did, as well as she? Did he come for my sake; and, by behaving in such a manner to those present of my samily, imagine he was doing me either service or pleasure?—He knows how they hate him: Nor will he take pains, would pains do, to obviate their hatred.

You and I, my dear, have often taken notice of his Pride; and you have rallied him upon it; and inflead of exculpating himself, he has owned it: And by owning it he as thought he has done enough.

For my own part, I thought Pride in his case an improper subject for raillery.—People of birth and fortune to be proud, is so needless, so mean a vice!—
If they deserve respect, they will have it, without requiring it. In other words, for persons to endeavour to gain respect by a haughty behaviour, is to give a proof that they mistrust their own merit: To make confession that they know that their actions will not attract it.—Distinction or Quality may be prided in by those to whom distinction or quality is a new thing. And then the resection and contempt which such bring upon themselves by it, is a counter-balance.

Such added advantages too, as this man has in his person and mien: Learned also, as they say he is;— Such a man to be haughty, to be imperious!—The lines of his own face at the same time condemning him—how wholly inexcuseable!—Proud of what?

Not of doing well: The only justifiable Pride.— Proud of exterior advantages!—Must not one be led by such a stop short pride, as I may call it, in him or her who has it, to mistrust the interior? Some people may indeed be afraid, that if they did not assume, they would be trampled upon. A very narrow fear, how—Vol. I.

L

M ene

lity

a'C

the

his

rafl

Spe

gho

ftep

To

mo fup!

fion

vou

last,

with

the

who

WOU

of n

as l

(a) wit, t]

Rule

each o

I

ever, fince they trample upon themselves, who can fear this. But this man must be secure, that humility would be an ornament to him.

He has talents indeed: But those talents and his personal advantages have been snares to him. It is plain they have. And this shews, that, weighed in an equal balance, he would be found greatly wanting.

Had my friends confided as they did at first, in that discretion which they do not accuse me of being defective in, I dare say I should have found him out: And then should have been as resolute to dismiss him, as I was to dismiss others, and as I am never to have Mr. Solmes. O that they did but know my heart!—It shall sooner burst, than voluntarily, uncompelled, undriven, dictate a measure that shall cast a stureither upon Them, or upon my Sex.

Excuse me, my dear friend, for these grave soliloquies, as I may call them. How have I run from reflection to reflection!—But the occasion is recent—

They are all in commotion below upon it.

Shorey fays, that Mr. Lovelace watched my Mother's eye, and bowed to her: And she returned the compliment. He always admired my Mother. She would not, I believe, have hated him, had she not been bid to hate him; and had it not been for the Rencounter between him and her only Son.

Dr. Lewen was at church; and observing, as every one else did, the disorder into which Mr. Lovelace's appearance had put all our family, was so good as to engage him in conversation, when the service was over, till they were all gone to their coaches.

My Uncles had my Letters in the morning. They, as well as my Father, are more and more incensed against me, it seems. Their Answers, if they vouchfase to answer me, will demonstrate, I doubt not, the unseasonableness of this rash man's presence at our church.

They are angry also, as I understand, with my Mother,

Mother, for returning his compliment. What an enemy is hatred, even to the commmon forms of civility! which, however, more distinguish the payer of a compliment, than the receiver. But they all fee, they fay, that there is but one way to put an end to his infults. So I shall fuffer: And in what will the rash man have benefited himself, or mended his prospects?

I am extremely apprehensive that this worse than ghost-like appearance of his, bodes some still bolder step. If he come hither (and very desirous he is of my leave to come) I am afraid there will be murder. To avoid That, if there were no other way, I would most willingly be buried alive.

They are all in confultation—Upon my Letters, I suppose—So they were in the morning; which occafioned my Uncles to be at our chnrch. I will fend you the copies of those Letters, as I promised in my last, when I see whether I can give you their Answers with them. This Letter is all-I cannot tell whatthe effect of apprehension and displeasure at the man who has occasioned my apprehensions. Six lines would have contained all that is in it to the purpose of my Itory.

See p. 205, for Mr. Lovelace's account of his behaviour and intentions in his appearance at their church.

LETTER XXXI.

Mr. LOVELACE, To JOHN BELFORD, E/q; Monday, March 13.

N vain dost thou (a) and thy compeers press me to go to town, while I am in such an uncertainty as I am in at present with this proud Beauty. All

(a) These gentlemen affected what they called the Roman style (to wit, the thee and the thou) in their Letters: And it was an agreed Rule with them, to take in good part whatever freedoms they treated each other with, if the passages were written in that style.

K 2

the

hey, enled

can

mi-

his

It is

d in

ing.

that

de-

out:

him,

have

1 -

lled,

r ei-

olilo-

rent-

Mo-

the e not

r the

every ace's

as to

· Was

ouchnot,

ce at

h my ther,

L

B

kr

as

CU

im

an

be

I

mi

ad

OW

ha

cle

of

fic

off

ed

A

ma

ha

th:

cli

Ne

w

in

ap

my

for

ca

tio

P

the ground I have hitherto gained with her, is entirely owing to her concern for the safety of people whom I have reason to hate.

Write then, thou biddest me, if I will not come. That, indeed, I can do; and as well without a subject, as with one. And what follows shall be a proof of it.

The Lady's malevolent Brother has now, as I told thee at M. Hall, introduced another man; the most unpromising in his person and qualities, the most formidable in his offers, that has yet appeared.

This man has by his proposals captivated every soul of the Harlowes—Soul! did I say—There is not a soul among them but my Charmer's: And she, withstanding them All, is actually confined, and otherwise maltreated by a Father the most gloomy and positive; at the instigation of a Brother the most arrogant and selfish—But thou knowest their characters; and I will not therefore sully my Paper with them.

But is it not a confounded thing to be in Love with one, who is the Daughter, the Sister, the Niece, of a family I must eternally despise? And, the devil of at, That Love increasing, with her—what shall I call it?—'Tis not scorn:—'Tis not pride:—'Tis not the insolence of an adored Beauty:—But 'tis to Virtue, it seems, that my difficulties are owing; and I pay for not being a sly sinner, an hypocrite; for being regardless of my reputation; for permitting slander to open its mouth against me. But is it necessary all before me, upon my own terms—I, who never inspired a fear, that had not a discernibly predominant mixture of Love in it; to be an hypocrite?—Well says the poet:

He who feems virtuous does but act a part; And shews not his own Nature, but his Art.

Well, but it seems I must practise for This Art, ly

m

boof

old

oft

oroul

t a

thwife

ve;

and

will

with

, of il of all [

s not

s to

for

tting

t need to

who · pre-

rite!

if I would fucceed with this truly admirable creature? But why practife for it?-Cannot I indeed reform! -I have but one vice; -Have I, Jack?-Thou knowest my heart, if any man living does. as I know it myself, thou knowest it. But 'tis a curfed deceiver; for it has many and many a time imposed upon its master—Master, did I say? That am I not now; nor have I been from the moment I beheld this angel of a woman. Prepared indeed as I was by her character before I faw her: For what a mind must that be, which tho' not virtuous itself, admires not virtue in another? - My visit to Arabella, owing to a mistake of the Sisters, into which, as thou haft heard me fay, I was led by the blundering Uncle; who was to introduce me (but lately come from abroad) to the Divinity, as I thought; but, instead of her, carried me to a mere mortal. And much difficulty had I, fo fond and forward my Lady! to get off without forfeiting All with a family that I intended should give me a Goddess.

I have boasted, that I was once in love before:— And indeed I thought I was. It was in my early manhood—with that Quality-jilt, whose insidelity I have vowed to revenge upon as many of the Sex as shall come into my power. I believe, in different climes, I have already sacrificed an Hecatomb to my Nemesis, in pursuance of this vow. But upon recollecting what I was then, and comparing it with what I find myself now, I cannot say that I was ever in Love before.

What was it then, dost thou ask me, since the disappointment had such effects upon me, when I found myself jilted, that I was hardly kept in my senses?— Why, I'll tell thee what, as near as I can remember; for it was a great while ago:—It was—Egad, Jack, I can hardly tell what it was—But a vehement aspiration after a novelty, I think—Those consounded Puets, with their terrenely-celestial descriptions, did as much

Art,

L

w

be

bu

fha

gra

an

Pa

thi

an abi

ftri

a v fill

no

the

wh

wh

no

lov

my

Lo

pos

tha

ado

of

wh

fto

much with me as the Lady: They fired my imagination, and fet me upon a defire to become a goddefs. maker. I must needs try my new-sledged pinions in Sonnet, Elogy, and Madrigal. I must have a Cynthia, a Stella, a Sacharissa, as well as the best of them: Darts, and slames, and the devil knows what, must I give to my Cupid. I must create Beauty, and place it where nobody else could find it: And many a time have I been at a loss for a subject, when my new created goddess has been kinder than it was proper for my plaintive Sonnet that she should be.

Then I had a Vanity of another fort in my passion: I found myself well received among the women in general; and I thought it a pretty lady-like tyranny II was then very young, and very vain!] to single out some one of the Sex, to make half a score jealous. And I can tell thee, it had its effect: For many an eye have I made to sparkle with rival indignation: Many a cheek glow; and even many a fan have I caused to be snapped at a Sister-beauty; accompanied with a reflection perhaps at being seen alone with a wild young sellow who could not be in private with both at once.

In short, Jack, it was more Pride than Love, as I now find it, that put me upon making such a confounded rout about losing this noble varletess. I thought she loved me at least as well as I believed I loved her: Nay, I had the vanity to suppose she could not help it. My friends were pleased with my choice. They wanted me to be shackled: For early did they doubt my morals, as to the Sex. They saw, that the dancing, the singing, the musical Ladies were all fond of my Company: For who [I am in a humour to be vain, I think!—for who] danced, who sung, who touched the string, whatever the instrument, with a better grace than thy friend?

I have no notion of playing the hypocrite so egregiously, as to pretend to be blind to qualifications which igi-

els-

s in yn-

of

nat,

and

any

my oro-

on:

in nny

igle

ous.

an

on:

re I

nied

th a

rith

as I

on-

I be

uld

ice.

hey

the

all

nuo

ng,

ent,

ons

ich

I

which every one fees and acknowledges. Such praife-begging hypocrify? Such affectedly disclaimed attributes: Such contemptible praise-traps!—But yet, shall my vanity extend only to personals, such as the gracefulness of dress, my deboniaire, and my assure-ance—Self-taught, self-acquired, these!—For my Parts, I value not myself upon them. Thou wilt say, I have no cause.—Perhaps not; But if I had anything valuable as to intellectuals, those are not my own; and to be proud of what a man is answerable for the abuse of, and has no merit in the right use of, is to strut, like the jay, in borrowed plumage.

But to return to my fair jilt—I could not bear, that a woman, who was the first that had bound me in silken setters [they were not iron ones, like those I now wear] should prefer a coronet to me: And when the bird was flown, I set more value upon it, than when I had it safe in my cage, and could visit it when I pleased.

But now am I indeed in Love. I can think of nothing, of nobody, but the divine Clariffa Harlowe—Harlowe?—How that hated word sticks in my throat—But I shall give her for it the name of Love (a).

CLARISSA! O there's music in the name, That, soft'ning me to infant tenderness, Makes my heart spring like the first leaps of life!

But couldst thou have believed that I, who think it possible for me to favour as much as I can be favoured; that I, who for this charming creature think of foregoing the life of honour for the life of shackles; could adopt those over-tender lines of Otway?

I check myself, and leaving the three first Lines of the following of Dryden to the family of the whiners, find the workings of the passion in my formy foul better expressed by the three last :

(a) Lovelace.

wi

of

aft

TI

fan

and

at I

hea

glo

10 lace

ren

boa

and

orq

ang

it-

thei

Wi

felle

ble

Und

the

fpeć ties

beer

a pe

rela

then

me, Con

H

Love various minds does variously inspire: He stirs in gentle natures gentle fires; Like that of incense on the altar laid.

But raging flames tempestuous souls invade: A fire, which ev'ry windy passion blows; With Pride it mounts, and with Revenge it glows.

And with REVENCE it shall glow!—For, dost thou think, that if it were not from the hope, that this stupid family are all combined to do my work for me, I would bear their infults?—Is it possible to imagine, that I would be braved as I am braved, threatened as I am threatened, by those who are afraid to fee me; and by this brutal Brother too, to whom I gave a life [A life, indeed, not worth my taking!]; had I not a greater pride in knowing, that by means of his very Spy upon me, I am playing him off as I please; cooling or inflaming his violent passions as may best fuit my purposes; permitting so much to be revealed of my life and actions, and intentions, as may give him such a confidence in his double-faced agent, as shall enable me to dance his employer upon my own wires for 194 over Hade a sade-sade

This it is that makes my Pride mount above my Resentment. By this engine, whose springs I am continually oiling, I play them all off. The busy old tarpaulin Uncle I make but my embassador to Queen Annabella Howe, to engage her (for example-sake to her Princessly daughter) to join in their cause, and to affert an authority they are resolved, right or wrong, (or I could do nothing) to maintain.

And what my motive, dost thou ask? No less than this, That my Beloved shall find no protection out of my family; for, if I know hers, sly she must, or have the man she hates. This, therefore, if I take my measures right, and my Familiar sail me not, will secure her mine, in spite of them all; in spite of her own inslexible heart: Mine, without condition;

without without reformation promifes; without the necessity of a fiege of years, perhaps; and to be even then, after wearing the guife of a merit-doubting hypocrify, at an uncertainty, upon a probation unapproved of-Then shall I have all the rascals and rascalesses of the family come creeping to me: I prescribing to them; and bringing that fordidly-imperious Brother to kneel at the footstool of my throne.

doff

that ork

to

red.

raid

om

!];

ans

as [

s as

o be

as

ced

pon

my

am

ouly

to :

ple-

ule,

t or

han

t of

lave

my

will

of

on; out

All my fear arises from the little hold I have in the heart of this charming Frost-piece: Such a constant glow upon her lovely features: Eyes fo sparkling: Limbs fo divinely turned: Health fo florid: Youth so blooming: Air so animated—To have an heart so impenetrable: And I, the hitherto successful Lovelace, the addresser-How can it be? Yet there are people, and I have talked with some of them, who remember that the was born. Her nurse Norton boalts of her maternal offices in her earliest infancy; and in her education gradotim. So that there is full proof, that the came not from above all at once an angel! How then can the be so impenetrable?

But here's her mistake; nor will she be cured of it-She takes the man she calls her Father [Her Mother had been faultless, had she not been her Father's Wife]; the takes the men the calls her Uncles; the fellow the calls her Brother; and the poor contemptible the calls her Sifter; to be her Father, to be her Uncles, her Brother, her Sister; and that, as such, the owes to some of them reverence, to others respect, let them treat her ever so cruelly!—Sordid ties!—Mere cradle-prejudices!—For had they not been imposed upon her by Nature, when she was in a perverse humour, or could she have chosen her relations, Would any of thefe have teen among them?

How my heart rifes at her preference of them to me, when the is convinced of their injust ce to me! Convinced, that the alliance would do honour to them

I

n

W

11

H

H

Ï

th

al

21

F

m

M

th

m

De

tu

no

eil

gir

Bu

kn

tak

all—herself excepted; to whom every one owes honour; and from whom the most princely family might receive it. But how much more will my heart rise with indignation against her, if I find she hesitates but one moment (however persecuted) about preferring me to the man she avowedly hates! But she cannot surely be so mean as to purchase her peace with them at so dear a rate. She cannot give a fanction to projects formed in malice, and sounded in a selfishness (and that at her own expence) which she has spirit enough to despise in others; and ought to disavow, that we may not think her a Harlowe.

By this incoherent ramble thou wilt gather, that I am not likely to come up in haste; fince I must endeavour first to obtain some assurance from the Beloved of my soul, that I shall not be facrificed to such a wretch as Solmes! Woe be to the Fair-one, if ever she be driven into my power (for I despair of a voluntary impulse in my favour) and I find a difficulty in obtaining this fecurity.

That her indifference to me is not owing to the fuperior liking she has for any other man, is what rivets my chains: But take care, Fair-one; take care, O thou most exalted of female minds, and loveliest of persons, how thou debasest thyself by encouraging such a competition as thy sordid relations have set on foot in mere malice to me!—Thou wilt say I rave. And so I do:

Perdition catch my Soul, but I do love ber.

Else, could I bear the perpetual revilings of her implacable family?—Else, could I basely creep aboutnot her proud Father's house—but his paddock—and garden-walls?—Yet a (quarter of a mile distance between us) not hoping to behold the least glimpse of her shadow?—Else, should I think myself repaid, amply repaid, if the fourth, fifth, or sixth midnight stroll, thro' unfrequented paths, and over briery inclosures, closures, affords me a few cold lines; the even expected purport only to let me know, that she values the most worthless person of her very worthless family, more than she values me; and that she would not write at all, but to induce me to bear insults, which un-man me to bear?—My lodging in the intermediate way, at a wretched alehouse; disguised like an inmate of it: Accommodations equally vile, as those I met with in my Westphalian journey. 'Tis well, that the necessity for all This arises not from scorn and tyranny! but is first imposed upon herself!

But was ever hero in Romance (fighting with giants and dragons excepted) called upon to harder trials?— Fortune and family, and reversinary grandeur, on my side! Such a wretched fellow my competitor?— Must I not be deplorably in Love, that can go thro' these difficulties, encounter these contempts?—By my soul, I am half-ashamed of myself: I, who am perjured too, by priority of obligation, if I am faithful to any woman in the world!

And yet, why fay I, I am half-ashamed?—Is it not a glory to love her whom ever one who sees her, either loves, or reveres, or both? Dryden says,

The Cause of Love can never be assign'd: 'Tis in no face; —But in the Lover's mind.

-And Cowley thus addresses Beauty as a mere imaginary:

Beauty! thou wild fantastic ape,
Who dost in ev'ry country change thy shape: Here black; there brown; here tawny; and there white; Thou statt'rer! who comply'st with ev'ry sight!
Who hast no certain What, nor Where.

But both these, had they been her cotemporaries, and known her, would have confessed themselves mistaken: And, taking together person, mind, and behaken.

K 6

honily

eart ates fer-

vith n to ness

pirit ow, en-Beuch ever luny in the what take

and f by relahou

her ut and

ance mple paid, night

y in-

L

th

im

m

W

an ha

be ar

gl

to

P

fe

t

a

viour, would have acknowledged the justice of the universal voice in her favour.

Twe ey'd with best regard; and many a time Th' harmony of their tongues hath into bondoge Brought my too diligent ear. For sev'ral virtues Have I liked sev'ral women. Never any With so full soul, but some defect in her Did quarrel with the noblest grace she ow'd, And put it to the soil. But She!—O She!
So perfect and so peerless is created,
Of ev'ry creature's best. Shakesp.

Thou art curious to know, If I have not started a new game?-If it be possible for so universal a Lover to be confined so long to one object? Thou knowest nothing of this charming creature, that thou canst put fuch questions to me; or thinkest thou knowest me better than thou doft. All that's excellent in her Sex is this Lady !- Until by MATRIMONIAL, or EQUAL intimacies, I have found her less than angel, it is impossible to think of any other. Then there are so many stimulatives to such a spirit as mine in this affair, besides Love: Such a field of stratagem and my heart. Then the rewarding end of all!—To carry off such a girl as this, in spite of all her watchful and implacable friends; and in spite of a prudence and referve that I never met with in any of the Sex :- What a triumph !- What a triumph over the whole Sex !- And then fuch a Revenge to gratify; which is only at present politically reined in, eventually to break forth with greater fury-Is it possible, thinkest thou, that there can be room for a thought that is not of her, and devoted to her?

By the advices I have this moment received, I have reason to think, that I shall have occasion for thee here. the ſp.

da

ver

eft

out

me

ex

AL

m-

fo

his

ind

of

To

ch-

ru-

of

ver

ra-

in,

it

for

ave

hee

re.

here. Hold thyfelf in readiness to come down upon the first summons.

Let Belton and Mowbray, and Tourville, like-wise prepare themselves. I have a great mind to contrive a method to send James Harlowe to travel for improvement. Never was there Booby-'Squire that more wanted it. Contrive it, did I say? I have already contrived it; could I but put it in execution without being suspected to have a hand in it. This I am resolved upon; If I have not his Sister, I will have Him.

But be This as it may, there is a present likelihood of room for glorious mischief. A consederacy had been for some time formed against me; but the Uncles and the Nephew are now to be double-servanted [single servanted they were before]; and those servants are to be double armed when they attend their masters abroad. This indicates their resolute enmity to me, and as resolute favour to Solmes. The reinforced orders for this hostile apparatus are owing it feems to a vifit I made yesterday to their Church-A good place I thought to begin a Reconciliation in; supposing the heads of the family to be Christians, and that they meant something by their prayers. My hopes were to have an invitation (or, at least, to gain a pretence) to accompany home the gloomy Sire; and fo get an opportunity to fee my goddess: For I believed they durst not but be civil to me, at least. But they were filled with terror it feems at my entrance; a terror they could not get over. I faw it indeed in their countenances; and that they all expected fomething extraordinary to follow. -And so it should have done, had I been more sure than I am of their Daughter's favour. Yet not a hair of any of their flupid heads do I intend to hurt.

You shall all have your directions in writing, if there be occasion. But after all, I dare say there will be no need but to shew your faces in my company.

Such

w ra

po

W

to

or

to

ap

th

fe.

fr

P

1 u

f

b

t

o d

Such faces never could four men shew—Mowbray's fo fierce and so fighting: Belton's so pert and so pimply: Tourville's so fair and so foppish: Thine so rough and so resolute: And I your Leader!—What hearts, altho' meditating hostility, must those be which we shall not appall?—Each man occasionally attended by a servant or two, long ago chosen for qualities refembling those of his master.

Thus, Jack, as thou desirest, have I written.—Written upon something; upon Nothing; upon Revence, which I love; upon Love, which I hate, heartily hate, because 'tis my master: And upon the devil knows what besides:—For looking back, I am amazed at the length of it. Thou may'st read it: I would not for a King's ransom—But so as I do but write, thou fayest thou wilt be pleased.

Be pleased then. I command thee to be pleased: If not for the writer's or written's sake, for thy word's sake. And so in the royal style (for am I not likely to be thy King and thy Emperor in the great affair before us?) I bid Thee very heartily Farewel.

LETTER XXXII.

Miss CLARISSA HARLOWE, To Miss Howe.

Tuesday, March 14.

I Now fend you copies of my Letters to my Uncles: with their Answers. Be pleased to return the latter by the first deposit. I leave them for you to make remarks upon. I shall make none.

To John Harlowe, Efq;

Sat. March 11.

A LLOW me, my honoured Second Papa, as in my happy days you taught me to call you, to implore your interest with my Papa, to engage him

to

to dispense with a command, which, if insisted upon, will deprive me of my free-will, and make me mise-rable for my whole life.

For my whole life! let me repeat: Is that a small point, my dear Uncle, to give up? Am not I to live with the man? Is any-body else? Shall I not therefore be allowed to judge for myself, whether I can,

or cannot, live happily with him?

y's

10

fo

hat

ich

ded

re-

E-

ite,

the

am

: I

but

If

rd's

ely

fair

.

es:

the

to

in

to im

to

Should it be ever so unhappily, will it be prudence to complain, or appeal? If it were, to whom could I appeal with effect against a husband? And would not the invincible and avowed dislike I have for him at setting out, seem to justify any ill usage from him, in that State, were I to be ever so observant of him? And if I were to be at all observant of him, it must be from Fear, not Love.

Once more, let me repeat, That this is not a small point to give up: And that it is for life. Why, I pray you, good Sir, should I be made miserable for life? Why should I be deprived of all comfort, but that which the hope that it would be a very short one, would afford me?

Marriage is a very folemn engagement, enough to make a young creature's heart ake, with the best profpects, when the thinks feriously of it!—To be given up to a strange man; To be engrafted into a strange family; To give up her very Name, as a mark of her becoming his absolute and dependent property; To be obliged to prefer this strange man to Father, Mother—to every body:—And his humours to all her own—Or to contend perhaps, in breach of a vowed duty, for every innocent instance of free-will-To go no whither; To make acquaintance; To give up acquaintance; To renounce even the strictest friendthips perhaps; all at his pleasure, whether the think it reasonable to do so or not: Surely, Sir, a young creature ought not to be obliged to make all these facrifices but for such a man as the can love.—If she be,

I

N

fe

r

d

n

pe

pe

ba

di

of

to

be ad

ha

I

be, how fad must be the case !- How miserable the life, if it be called life!

I wish I could obey you all. What a pleasure would it be to me, if I could !- Marry first, and Love will come after, was faid by one of my dearest friends: But this is a shocking affertion. A thousand things may happen to make that state but barely tolerable, where it is entered into with mutual affection: What must it then be, where the Husband can have no confidence in the Love of his Wife; but has reason rather to question it, from the preference he himself believes the would have given to fomebody elfe, had the had her own option? What doubts, what jealoufies, what want of tenderness, what unfavourable prepossessions, will there be, in a Matrimony thus circumftanced! How will every look, every action, even the most innocent, be liable to misconstruction!-While, on the other hand, an indifference, a carelefiness to oblige, may take place; and Fear only can constrain even an appearance of what ought to be the effect of undifguifed Love!

Think seriously of these things, dear good Sir, and represent them to my Father in that strong light which the subject will bear; but in which my Sex, and my tender years and inexperience, will not permit me to paint it; and use your powerful interest, that your poor Niece may not be consigned to a misery so durable.

I offered to engage not to marry at all, if that condition may be accepted. What a difgrace is it to me to be thus sequestred from company, thus banished my Papa's and Mamma's presence; thus slighted and deserted by you, Sir, and my other kind Uncle! And to be hindered from attending at that Public Worship, which, were I out of the way of my duty, would be most likely to reduce me into the right path again!—Is this the way, Sir; can this be thought to be the way to be taken with a free and open spirit? May

May not this strange method rather harden than convince? I cannot bear to live in disgrace thus: The very servants so lately permitted to be under my own direction, hardly daring to speak to me; my own servant discarded with high marks of undeferved suspicion and displeasure, and my Sister's maid set over me.

The matter may be too far pushed.—Indeed it may.

And then, perhaps, every one will be forry for their parts in it.

. I.

he ire

ove

s:

gs

le,

nat

n-

er

e-

ad

u-

e-

Ir-

en

e-

an

he

nd

ht

X,

nit

at 10

at

to

h-

ed

!

ic y,

th

to 13

ay

May I be permitted to mention an expedient?— If I am to be watched, banished, and confined; Suppose, Sir, it were to be at your house?"—Then the neighbouring gentry will the less wonder, that the person of whom they used to think so favourably, appear not at church here; and that she received not their visits.

I hope, there can be no objection to This. You used to love to have me with you, Sir, when all went happily with me: And will you not now permit me, in my troubles, the favour of your house, till all this displeasure be overblown?—Upon my word, Sir, I will not stir out of doors, if you require the contrary of me: Nor will I see any-body, but whom you will allow me to see; provided Mr. Solmes be not brought to persecute me there.

Procure, then, this favour for me; if you cannot procure the still greater, that of a happy Reconciliation (which nevertheless I presume to hope for, if you will be so good as to plead for me); and you will then add to those favours, and to that indulgence, which have bound me, and will for ever bind me to be

Your dutiful and obliged Nicce, - CLARISSA HARLOWE.

The ANSWER.

My dear Niece,

Sunday Night.

T grieves me to be forced to deny you any-thing you ask. Yet it must be so; for unless you can bring

L

up

an yo

th

far

till

pe

bic

ter

me

Ar

be

as,

acc

no

qu

oth

Lo

ım

dif

to

It

ag:

thi

Ic

tha

bring your mind to oblige us in this one point, in which our promises and honour were engaged before we believed there could be so sturdy an opposition, you must never expect to be what you have been to us all.

In fhort, Niece, we are an embattled phalanx. Your reading makes you a stranger to nothing, but what you should be most acquainted with—So you will see by that expression, that we are not to be pierced by your persuasions, and invincible persistence. We have agreed all to be moved, or none; and not to comply without one another. So you know your destiny; and have nothing to do but to yield to it.

Let me tell you, the virtue of obedience lies not in obliging when you can be obliged again—But give up an inclination, and there is some merit in That.

As to your expedient; You shall not come to my honse, Miss Clary; tho' this is a prayer I little thought I ever should have denied you: For were you to keep your word as to seeing nobody but whom we please, yet can you write to somebody else, and receive Letters from him: This we too well know you can, and have done—More is the shame and the pity!

You offer to live fingle, Miss—We wish you married: But because you may not have the man your heart is set upon, why, truly, you will have nobody we shall recommend: And as we know, that somehow or other you correspond with him, or at least did, as long as you could; and as he defies us all, and would not dare to do so, if he were not sure of you in spite of us all (which is not a little vexatious to us, you must think); we are resolved to frustrate him, and triumph over him, rather than that he should triumph over us: That's one word for all. So expect not any advocateship from me: I will not plead for you; and that's enough. From

Your displeased Uncle, JOHN HARLOWE.

P. S. For the rest, I refer to my Brother Antony.

To ANTONY HARLOWE, Efq;

LET. 32.

t, in efore

you

s all.

Your

what

I fee

d by

he le

mply

iny;

ot in

e up

o my

ught

keep

eale,

Let.

and

mar-

your body

ome-

leaft

and

you

o us,

and

mph

any

and

E.

ony.

To

Honoured Sir, Saturday, March 11.

A Syou have thought fit to favour Mr. Solmes with your particular recommendation, and was very earnest in his behalf, ranking him (as you told me, upon introducing him to me) among your select friends; and expecting my regards to him accordingly; I beg your patience, while I offer a few things, out of many that I could offer, to your serious consideration, on occasion of his address to me, if I am to use that word.

I am charged with prepossession in another person's favour. You will be pleased, Sir, to remember, that till my Brother returned from Scotland, that other person was not absolutely discouraged, nor was I forbid to receive his visits. I believe it will not be pretended, that in birth, education, or personal endowments, a comparison can be made between the two. And only let me ask you, Sir, if the one would have been thought of for me, had he not made such offers, as, upon my word, I think, I ought not in justice to accept of, nor be to propose: Offers, which if be had not made, I dare say, my Papa would not have required them of him.

But the one, it seems, has many faults:—Is the other faultles?—The principal thing objected to Mr. Lovelace (and a very inexcusable one) is, that he is immoral in his Loves—Is not the other in his Hatreds?—Nay, as I may say, in his Loves too (the object only differing) if the love of money be the root of all evil.

But, Sir, if I am prepossessed, what has Mr. Solmes to hope for?—Why should he persevere? What must I think of the man who would wish me to be his Wise against my inclination?—And is it not a very harsh thing for my friends to desire to see me married to one I cannot love, when they will not be persuaded but that there is one whom I do love?

Treated

Treated as I am, now is the time for me to speak out or never.—Let me review what it is Mr. Solmes depends upon on this occasion. Does he believe, that the difgrace which I fuffer on his account, will give him a merit with me? Does he think to win my esteem, thro' my Uncles sternness to me; by my Bro. ther's contemptuous Usage; by my Sister's unkind. ness; by being denied to visit, or be visited; and to correspond with my chosen friend, altho' a person of unexceptionable honour and prudence, and of my own Sex; my fervant to be torn from me, and another fervant set over me; to be confined, like a prisoner, to narrow and difgraceful limits, in order avowedly to mortify me, and to break my spirit; to be turned out of that family-management which I loved, and had the greater pleasure in it, because it was an ease, as I thought, to my Mamma, and what my Sifter chose not; and yet, tho' time hangs heavy upon my hands, to be so put out of my course, that I have as little inclination as liberty to purfue any of my choice delights?—Are these steps necessary to reduce me to a level so low, as to make me a fit Wife for this man? -Yet these are all he can have to trust to-And if his reliance is on these measures, I would have him to know, that he mistakes meekness and gentleness of disposition for servility and baseness of heart.

I befeech you, Sir, to let the natural turn and bent of his mind and my mind be confidered: What are his qualities, by which he would hope to win my esteem?—Dear, dear Sir, if I am to be compelled, let it be in favour of a man that can read and write—That can teach me something: For what a Husband must that man make, who can do nothing but command; and needs himself the instruction he should be qualified to give?

I may be conceited, Sir; I may be vain of my little reading; of my writing; as of late I have more than once been told I am—But, Sir, the more unequal the proposed

myl unfi I put

LE

pro

lace a m

incu

kno ed r Sir, her

who ther

me tain perf fuffi

F

his weight for just due dulg pear our make of nupo

as I

I.

ak

es

iat

ve

ny

.0.

d-

to

of

wn

er-

to

to

out

nad

is I

ofe

ds,

in-

de

0 1

an?

d if

him

s of

ent

are

my

let

e-

and

om-

ittle

than the

ofed

proposed match, if so: The better opinion I have of myself, the worse I must have of him; and the more unsit are we for each other.

Indeed, Sir, I must say, I thought my friends had put a higher value upon me. My Brother pretended once, that it was owing to such value, that Mr. Lovelace's address was prohibited.—Can this be; and such a man as Mr. Solmes be intended for me?

As to his proposed Settlements, I hope I shall not incur your greater displeasure, if I say, what all who know me have reason to think (and some have upbraided me for) that I despise those motives. Dear, dear Sir, what are Settlements to one who has as much of her own as the withes for?—Who has more in her own power, as a fingle person, than it is probable she would be permitted to have at her disposal, as a Wife? -Whose expences and ambition are moderate; and who, if the had superfluities, would rather dispense them to the necessitious, than lay them by her useless? If then fuch narrow motives have so little weight with me for my own benefit, shall the remote and uncertain view of family-aggrandizements, and that in the person of my Brother and his descendants, be thought fufficient to influence me?

Has the behaviour of that Brother to me of late, or his confideration for the family (which had so little weight with him, that he could chuse to hazard a life so justly precious as an only Son's, rather than not gratify passions which he is above attempting to subdue, and, give me leave to say, has been too much indulged in, either with regard to his own good, or the peace of any-body related to him; Has his behaviour, I say) deserved of me in particular, that I should make a sacrifice of my temporal (and, who knows? of my eternal) happiness, to promote a plan formed upon chimerical, at least upon unlikely contingencies; as I will undertake to demonstrate, if I may be permitted to examine it?

I am afraid you will condemn my warmth: But does not the occasion require it? To the want of a greater degree of earnestness in my opposition, it seems, it is owing, that such advances have been made, as have been made. Then, dear Sir, allow something, I beseech you, for a spirit raised and embittered by disgraces, which (knowing my own heart)

I am confident to fay, are unmerited.

But why have I said so much, in answer to the supposed charge of preposession, when I have declared to my Mamma, as now, Sir, I do to You, that if it be not insisted upon that I shall marry any other person, particularly this Mr. Solmes, I will enter into any engagements never to have the other, nor any man else, without their consents; that is to say, without the consents of my Father and Mother, and of you my Uncle, and my elder Uncle, and my Cousin Morden, as he is one of the Trustees for my Grandfather's bounty to me?—As to my Brother indeed, I cannot say, that his treatment of me has been of late so brotherly, as to entitle him to more than civility from me: And for this, give me leave to add, he would be very much my debtor.

If I have not been explicit enough in declaring my dislike to Mr. Solmes (that the prepossession which is charged upon me may not be supposed to influence me against him) I do declare solemnly, That, were there no such man as Mr. Lovelace in the world, I would not have Mr. Solmes. It is necessary, in some one of my Letters to my dear friends, that I should write so clearly as to put this matter out of all doubt: And to whom can I better address myself with an explicitness that can admit of no mistake, than to that Uncle who professes the highest regard for plain-dealing and sincerity

Let me then, for these reasons, be still more particular in some of my exceptions to him.

Mr. Solmes appears to me (to all the world indeed)

Being has to Does little Uncl gener from open, must out of fimon his; Suc my G

LET

to ha

He is as in

for it venier confide allian narro induc fecone be, hi mifer, forego perfor

me, v

when

is faid when hemer

niean

this fe

Wh I think to have a very narrow mind, and no great capacity: He is coarfe and indelicate; as rough in his manners as in his person: He is not only narrow, but covetous: Being possessed of great wealth, he enjoys it not; nor has the spirit to communicate to a diffress of any kind. Does not his own Sifter live unhappily, for want of a little of his superfluities? And suffers not he his aged Uncle, the Brother of his own Mother, to owe to the generofity of strangers the poor subfistence he picks up from half-a-dozen families?—You know, Sir, my open, free, communicative temper: How unhappy must I be, circumscribed in his narrow, selfish circle! out of which being with-held by this diabolical parfimony, he dare no more stir, than a conjurer out of his; nor would let me.

LET. 32.

t

a

n

V

)

0

e

1,

-

,

e

S

t

-

n d

13

e

e d

of 0

0

S

0

1-

-

to

Such a man as this, love !- Yes, perhaps he may, my Grandfather's Estate; which he has told several persons (and could not resist hinting the same thing to me, with that fort of pleasure which a low mind takes, when it intimates its own interest as a sufficient motive for it to expect anothers favour) lies fo extremely convenient for him, that it would double the value of a considerable part of his own. That Estate, and an alliance which would do credit to his obscurity and narrowness, may make him think he can love, and induce him to believe he does: But at most, he is but a second-place Love. Riches were, are, and always will be, his predominant passion. His were left him by a miler, on this very account: And I must be obliged to forego all the choice delights of my life, and be as mean as he, or else be quite unhappy. Pardon, Sir, this feverity of expression—One is apt to say more than one would, of a person one dislikes, when more is faid in his favour than he can possibly deserve; and when he is urged to my acceptance with fo much vehemence, that there is no choice left me.

Whether these things be perfectly so, or not, while think they are, it is impossible I should ever look

LE

bot

you

take writ

beh

fam

if or

chile

Mif

obsti

cont

mem

hate.

racte

you (

posfil

Solm

the p fuch

whor

mone

come

Who

or a f

the of

is a fi

Wh-

Word

that w lor to contra

Th fo-T

H

In

upon Mr. Solmes in the light he is offered to me. Nay, where he to be proved ten times better than I have represented him, and sincerely think him; yet would he be still ten times more disagreeable to me than any other man I know in the world. Let me therefore beseech you, Sir, to become an advocate for your Niece, that she may not be made a victim to a man fo highly difguftful to her.

You and my other Uncle can do a great deal for me, if you please, with my Papa. Be persuaded, Sir, that I am not governed by obstinacy in this case; but by aversion; an aversion I cannot overcome: For, if I have but endeavoured to reason with myself (out of regard to the duty I owe to my Father's will) my heart has recoiled, and I have been averse to myself, for offering but to argue with myself, in behalf of a man who, in the light he appears to me, has no one merit; and who, knowing this aversion, could not persevere as he does, if he had the spirit of a man.

If, Sir, you can think the contents of this Letter reasonable, I beseech you to support them with your interest: If not—I shall be most unhappy?—Nevertheless, it is but just in me so to write, as that Mr.

Solmes may know what he has to truft to.

Forgive, dear Sir, this tedious Letter; and sufferit to have weight with you; and you will for ever oblige Your dutiful and affectionate Niece,

CL. HARLOWE.

Mr. ANTONY HARLOWE, To Miss CL. HARLOWE.

Niece CLARY,

YOU had better not write to us, or to any of us. To me particularly, you had better never to have fet pen to paper, on the subject whereupon you have written. He that is first in his own cause, saith the wise man, seemeth just: But his neighbour cometh and searcheth him. And so, in this respect, I will be your neighbour; for I will search your heart to the bottom;

ll be Who the pruden

Vo:

y,

·e-ıld

ny

ore

ur

an

for

ir,

but

, if

of

art

for nan

it;

ere tter

JUO

er-

Mr.

er it

lige

3.

WE.

us.

r to

you

faith

meth

1 be

the

om;

bottom; that is to say, if your Letter be written from your heart. Yet do I know what a task I have undertaken, because of the knack you are noted for at writing: But in defence of a Father's authority, in behalf of the good, and honour, and prosperity of a samily one comes of, what a hard thing it would be, if one could not beat down all the arguments a Rebel child (How loath I am to write down that word of Miss Clary Harlowe!) can bring, in behalf of her obstinacy!

In the first place, Don't you declare (and that contrary to your declarations to your Mother; remember that, girl!) that you prefer the man we all hate, and who hates us as bad!—Then what a character have you given of a worthy man! I wonder you dare write so freely of one we all respect—But possibly it may be for that very reason.

How you begin your Letter!—Because I value Mr. Solmes as my friend you treat him the worse—That's the plain Dunstable of the Matter, Miss!—I am not such a fool but I can see That.—And so a noted whoremonger is to be chosen before a man who is a money-lover!—Let me tell you, Niece, this little becomes so nice a one as you have been always reckoned. Who, think you, does most injustice, a prodigal man or a saving man!—The one saves his own money; the other spends other peoples. But your savourite is a sinner in grain, and upon record.

The devil's in your Sex! God forgive me for faying fo—The nicest of them will prefer a vile Rake and Wh—I suppose I must not repeat the word:—The Word will offend, when the Vicious denominated by that word will be chosen! I had not been a Bachelor to this time, if I had not seen such a mass of contradictions in you all—Such gnat-strainers and same! swallowers, as venerable Holy Writ has it.

What names will perverseness call things by !—A prudent man, who intends to be just to every-body, Vol. 1.

LE

you

So

niff

wer

can

of e mak

to y

ufec

you

YOU

not kno

wou

a mo

do ar

and :

ing a youn

lay,

-A

I can not r

can le

duty :

you h theref

not A desire

a scho

your

Bu

I:

B

is a covetous man!—While a vile, profligate Rake is christened with the appellation of a gallant man; and a polite man, I'll warant you!

It is my firm opinion, Lovelace would not have so much regard for you as he prosesses; but for two reasons. And what are these?—Why, out of spite to all of us—one of them: The other, because of your independent fortune. I wish your good Grandfather had not lest what he did so much in your own power, as I may say. But little did he imagine his beloved Grand-daughter would have turned upon all her friends as she has done!

What has Mr. Solmes to hope for, if you are prepoffessed? Hey-day! Is this you, Cousin Clary!—Has he then nothing to hope for from your Father's, and Mother's, and Our recommendation?—No, nothing at all, it seems!—O brave!—I should think that this, with a dutiful child, as we took you to be, was enough. Depending on this your duty, we proceeded: And now there is no help for it: For we will not be balked: Neither shall our friend Mr. Solmes, I can tell you that.

If your Estate is convenient for him, what then? Does that (pert Cousin) make it out that he does not love you? He had need to expect fome good with you, that has fo little good to hope for from you; mind that. But pray, is not this Estate our Estate, as we may fay? Have we not all an interest in it, and a prior right, if right were to have taken place? And was it more than a good old man's dotage, God rest his foul! that gave it you before us all?—Well then, ought we not to have a choice who shall have it in marriage with you? And would you have the conscience to wish us to let a vile fellow who hates us all, run away with it? - You bid me weigh what you write: Do you weigh this, girl: And it will appear we have more to fay for ourselves than you was aware of.

As

As to your hard treatment, as you call it, thank yourself for That. It may be over when you will: So I reckon nothing upon that. You was not banished and confined till all entreaty and fair speeches were tried with you: Mind that. And Mr. Solmes can't help your obstinacy.—Let that be observed too.

As to being visited, and visiting; you never was fond of either: So that's a grievance put into the scale to make weight.—As to disgrace, that's as bad to us as to you: So fine a young creature! So much as we used to brag of you!—And too besides, this is all in your power, as the rest.

e

;

Co

70

te

of

dvn

315

all

of-

ias

ind

ing.

bis,

was

ed:

be

can

en?

not

with

ou;

tate,

1 It,

ace!

God

Well

have

e the

hates

what

will

1 you

As

But your heart recoils, when you would persuade yourself to obey your Parent—Finely discribed, is it not!—Too truly described, I own, as you go on. I know, that you may love him if you will. I had a good mind to bid you hate him; then, perhaps, you would like him the better: For I have always found a most horrid romantic perverseness in your Sex.—To do and to love what you should not, is meat, drink, and vesture, to you all.

I am absolutely of your Brother's mind, That reading and writing, tho' not too much for the wits of you young girls, are too much for your judgments.—You say, you may be conceited, Cousin; you may be vain!—And so you are, to despise this gentleman as you do. He can read and write as well as most gentlemen, I can tell you that. Who told you Mr. Solmes cannot read and write? But you must have a Husband who can learn you something!—I wish you knew but your duty as well as you do your talents—That, Niece, you have of late days to learn; and Mr. Solmes will therefore find something to instruct you in. I will not shew him this Letter of yours, tho' you feem to desire it, lest it should provoke him to be too severe a schoolmaster, when you are his'n.

But when I think of it, suppose you are readier at your pen than he—You will make the more useful

L 2

wife

I

h

in

y

W

0

de

in

A

te

fh

de

tin

bo

ye

w

he

he

be.

to

art

to

you

goo

tha

Jac

fen

wife to him; won't you? For who is fo good an œconomift as you?—And you may keep all his accounts, and fave yourselves a Steward.—And, let me tell you, this is a fine advantage in a family: For those Stewards are often sad dogs, and creep into a man's Estate before he knows where he is; and not seldom is he forced to pay them interest for his own money.

I know not why a good wife should be above these things. It is better than lying abed half the day, and junketing and card-playing all the night, and making yourselves wholly useless to every good purpose in your own families, as is now the fashion among ye—The duce take ye all that do so, say!!

—Only that, thank my Stars, I am a Bache'or.

Then this is a province you are admirably versed in: You grieve that it is taken from you here, you know. So here, Miss, with Mr. Solmes you will have something to keep account of, for the sake of you and your children: With the other, perhaps you will have an account to keep, too—But an account of what will go over the left shoulder: Only what he squanders, what he borrows, and what he owes, and never will pay. Come, come, Cousin, you know nothing of the world; a man's a man; and you may have many partners in a handsome man, and costly ones too, who may lavish away all you save. Mr. Solmes therefore for my money, and I hope for yours.

But Mr. Solmes is a coarse man. He is not delicate enough for your niceness; because I suppose he dresses not like a sop and a coxcomb, and because he lays not himself out in complimental nonsense, the poisson of semale minds. He is a man of sense, I can tell you. No man talks more to the purpose to us: But you fly him so, that he has no opportunity given him, to express it to you: And a man who loves, if he have ever so much sense, looks like a sool; especially when he is despised, and treated as you treated him the last time he was in your company.

As

1.

-05

ts,

du,

rds

be-

he

efe

ay,

and

ur-

ion

1!

fed

you

ave

and

ave

will

ers,

will

of any

t00,

ere-

cate

effes

not

n of

you.

you

, to

have vhen

e last

As to his Sister; she threw herself away (as you want to do) against his full warning: For he told her what she had to trust to, if she married where she did marry. And he was as good as his word; and so an honest man ought: Offences against warning ought to be smarted for. Take care this be not your case. Mind that.

His Uncle deserves no favour from him; for he would have circumvented Mr. Solmes, and got Sir Oliver to leave to himself the Estate he had always designed for him his Nephew; and brought him up in the hope of it. Too ready forgiveness does but encourage offences: That's your good Father's maxim: And there would not be so many headstrong daughters as there are, if this maxim were kept in mind.—Punishments are of service to offenders; Rewards should be only to the meriting: And I think the former are to be dealt out rigorously, in wilful cases.

As to his Love; he shews it but too much for your defervings, as they have been of late; let me tell you That: And This is his misfortune; and may in time perhaps be yours.

As to his Parsimony, which you wickedly call diabolical [a very free word in your mouth, let me tell ye] Little reason have you of all people for this, on whom he proposes, of his own accord, to settle all he has in the world: A proof, let him love Riches as he will, that he loves you better. But that you may be without excuse on this score, we will tie him up to your own terms, and oblige him by the marriagearticles to allow you a very handsome quarterly sum to do what you please with. And this has been told you before; and I have said it to Mrs. Howe (that good and worthy Lady) before her proud daughter, that you might hear of it again.

To contradict the charge of prepossession to Lovelace, you offer never to have him without our consents: And what is This saying, but that you will hope

L 3

on

As

L

th

yo

in

in

W

th

pr

th

th

up

th

no

let

ho

W

no

W

he

you

M

is

to

M

M

for

the

the 28

his

to

on for our confents, and to wheedle and tire us out Then he will always be in expectation while you are fingle: And we are to live on at this rate (are we?) vexed by you, and continually watchful about you; and as continually exposed to his infolence and threats. Remember laft Sunday, girl !- What might have happened, had your Brother and he met?-Moreover, you cannot do with fuch a spirit as his, as you can with worthy Mr. Solmes: The one you make tremble; the other will make you quake-Mind that-And you will not be able to help yourfelf. And remember, that if there should be any misunderstanding between one of them and you, we should all interpole; and without effect, no doubt : But with the other, it would be felf-do, felf-have; and who would either care or dare to put in a word for you? Nor let the Supposition of matrimonial differences frighten you: Honey-moon lasts not now-a-days above a fortnight; and Dunmow Flitch, as I have been informed, was never claimed; tho' fome fay once it was. Marriage is a queer State, child, whether paired by the parties or by their friends. Out of three Brothers of us, you know, there was but one had courage to marry. And why was it, do you think? We were wife by other peoples experience.

Don't despise money so much: You may come to know the value of it: That is a piece of instruction that you are to learn; and which, according to your own notions, Mr. Solmes will be able to teach you.

I do indeed condemn your warmth. I will not allow for disgraces you bring upon yourself. If I thought them unmerited, I would be your advocate. But it was always my notion, that children should not dispute their Parents authority. When your Grandfather lest his Estate to you, tho' his three Sons, and a Grandfon, and your eldest Sister, were in being, we all acquiesced: And why? Because it was our Father's doing. Do you imitate that example: If you will not, those those who set it you have the more reason to hold you inexcusable. Mind that, Cousin.

You mention your Brother too scornfully: And, in your Letter to him, are very difrespectful; and so indeed you are to your Sifter, in the Letter you wrote to her. Your Brother, Madam, is your Brother; a third older than yourfelf; and a Man: And pray be fo good as not to forget what is due to a Brother, (who, next to us three Brothers) is the head of the family; and on whom the name depends—As upon your dutiful compliance depends the success of the noblest plan that ever was laid down for the honour of the family you are come of. And pray now let me alk you, If the honour of That will not be an honour to you?-If you don't think so, the more unworthy you. You shall see the plan, if you promise not to be prejudiced against it right or wrong. If you are not befotted to that man, I am fure you will like it. If you are, were Mr. Solmes an angel it would fignify nothing: For the devil is Love, and Love is the devil, when it gets into any of your heads. Many examples have I feen of that.

If there were no fuch man as Lovelace in the world, you would not have Mr. Solmes .- You would not, Miss!-Very pretty, truly!-We see how your spirit is embittered indeed .- Wonder not, fince it is come to your will not's, that those who have authority over you, fay, You finall have the other. And I am one. Mind that. And if it behoves You to fpeak out. Miss, it behoves US not to speak in. What's sauce for the goofe is fauce for the gander: Take that in your thought too.

I humbly apprehend, that Mr. Solmes has the spirit of a man, and a gentleman. I would admonish you therefore not to provoke it. He pities you as much as he loves you. He fays, He will convince you of his Love by deeds, fince he is not permitted by you to express it by words. And all his dependence is

upon

not,

ou, eats. apver,

. I

ut?

are

re?)

can emat-

reding ter-

ther, ther the

ou: tht;

was iage rties

us, rry. . by e to Etion your allow ught

ut it pute r left andacdo-

hole

be li

po

B

th

ar

lo

Y

Le

An

fee

Sailors

upon your generosity hereafter. We hope he may depend upon That: We encourage him to think he may. And this heartens him up. So that you may lay his constancy at your Parents and your Uncles doors; and This will be another mark of your duty, you know.

You must be sensible, that you restect upon your Parents, and all of us, when you tell me you cannot in justice accept of the Settlements proposed to you. This reflection we should have wondered at from you once; but now we don't.

224

There are many other very censurable passages in this free Letter of yours; but we must place them to the account of your embittered spirit. I am glad you mentioned that word, because we should have been at a loss what to have called it. - I should much rather nevertheless have had reason to give it a better name.

I-love you dearly still, Miss. I think you, tho' my Niece, one of the finest young gentlewomen I ever faw. But, upon my conscience, I think you ought to obey your Parents, and oblige me, and my Brother John: For you know very well, that we have nothing but your good at heart: Confisently indeed with the good and honour of all of us. What must we think of any one of it, who would not promote the good of the whole? and who would fet one part of it against another?-Which God forbid, say I!-You see I am for the good of all. What shall I get by it, let things go as they will? Do I want anything of any-body for my own fake? - Does my B other John?-Well, then, Cousin Clary, What w uld you be at, as I may fay?

O but You can't love Mr. Solmes !- But, I fay, you know not what you can do. You encourage yourfelf in your dislike. You permit your heart (little did I think it was such a froward one) to recoil. Take it to talk, Niece; drive it on as fast as it recoils [We do fo in all our Sea-fights, and Land-fights too, by our Sailors and Soldiers, or we should not conquer]; and we are all fure you will overcome it. And why? Because you ought. So we think, whatever you think: And whose thoughts are to be preferred? You may be wittier than we; but, if you are wifer, we have lived some of us, let me tell you, to very little purpose thirty or forty years longer than you.

I have written as long a Letter as yours. I may not write in fo lively, or fo polite a style as my Niece: But I think I have all the argument on my fide: And you will vastly oblige me, if you will shew me by your compliance with all our defires, that you think so too. If you do not, you must not expect an Advocate, or even a Friend, in me, dearly as I love you. For then I shall be forry to be called

Your Uncle,

Tuesday, Two in the Morning.

ANTONY HARLOWE.

Postscript.

You must send me no more Letters: But a compliable one you may fend. But I need not have forbid you; for I am fure, this, by fair argument, is unanswerable-I know it is. I have written day and night, I may fay, ever fince Sunday Morning, only church time, or the like of that: But this is the last, I can tell you, from

LETTER XXXIII.

Miss CLARISSA HARLOWE, To Miss Howe.

Thursday, March 16.

HAVING met with fuch bad fuccess in my application to my Relations, I have taken a step that will surprise you. It is no other than writing a Letter to Mr. Solmes himself. I sent it; and have his Answer. He had certainly help in it. For I have feen a Letter of his; as indifferently worded, as poorly

L 5

e do our ilors

L. I.

may

c he may

cles

uty,

70ur

can-

d to

dat

s in

m to

you

n at

ther

ne.

tho'

en I

you

my

we

ntly

hat

pro-

one iav all I

anymy

Vhat

fay,

our-

e did

ke it

re

th

eit

re

be

fer

co a r

yo

Sir

ma

and

2 1

tin

cru

me

it 1

hav

It is

be

in pru

to

mu

be

it w nati

will mee

whi

you for

con

I

spelt. Yet the superscription is of his dictating, I dare say; for he is a formal wretch. With these, I shall inclose one from my Brother to me, on occasion of mine to Mr. Solmes. I did think that it was possible to discourage the man from proceeding; and if I could have done that, it would have answered all my wishes. It was worth the trial. But you'll see nothing will do. My Brother has taken his measures too securely.

To ROGER SOLMES, Efq;

SIR, Wednesday, March 15.

YOU will wonder to receive a Letter from me; and more still at the uncommon subject of it. But the necessity of the case will justify me, at least in my own apprehension; and I shall therefore make no other apology for it.

When you first came acquainted with our family, you found the writer of This one of the happiest creatures in the world; beloved by the best and most indulgent of parents; and rejoicing in the kind savour of two affectionate Uncles, and in the esteem of every one.

But how is this happy scene now changed!—You was pleased to cast a favourable eye upon me. You addressed yourself to my friends: Your proposals were approved of by them—approved of without consulting me; as if my choice and happiness were of the least signification. Those who had a right to all reasonable obedience from me, insisted upon it without reserve. I had not the felicity to think as they did; almost the first time my sentiments differed from theirs. I besought them to indulge me in a point so important to my suture happiness: But, alas, in vain! And then (for I thought it was but honest) I told you my mind; and even that my affections were engaged. But, to my mortification and surprise, you persisted, and still persist.

The consequence of all is too grievous for me to repeat: You, who have fuch free access to the rest of the family, know it too well—too well you know it; either for the credit of your own generofity, or for my reputation. I am used, on your account, as I never before was used, and never before was thought to deferve to be used; and this was the hard, the impossible condition of their returning favour, that I must prefer a man to all others, that of all others I cannot prefer.

Thus diffressed, and made unhappy, and all for your fake, and thro' your cruel perseverance, I write, Sir, to demand of you the peace of mind you have robbed me of: To demand of you the Love of fomany dear friends, of which you have deprived me; and, if you have the generofity that should distinguish: a man, and a gentleman, to adjure you not to continue an address that has been attended with such cruel effects to the creature you profess to esteem.

If you really value me, as my friends would make me believe, and as you have declared you do, must it not be a mean and selfish value? A value that can have no merit with the unhappy object of it, because it is attended with effects so grievous to her? It must be for your own fake only, not for mine. And even: in this point you must be mistaken; for, would a prudent man wish to marry one who has not a heart: to give? Who cannot esteem him? Who therefore must prove a bad Wife!—And how cruel would it be to make a poor creature a bad Wife, whose pride it would be to make a good one?

If I am capable of judging, our tempers and inclinations are vastly different. Any other of my Sex will make you happier than I can. The treatment I meet with, and the obstinacy, as it is called, with which I support myself under it, ought to convince you of this; were I not able to give to good a reason for this my supposed perverseness, as that I cannot consent to marry a man whom I cannot value.

L 6

ly, eft oft fa-

em

e;

it.

aft

ke

I.

ire

n-

ne

if-

ve

It

lo.

ou ou fals out ere

t to it red n a las, eft) ons

lur-The

L

M

up

be

2

of

m

1

to

lo

m

M

But if, Sir, you have not so much generosity in your value for me, as to desist for my own sake, let me conjure you, by the regard due to yourself, and to your own suture happiness, to discontinue your suit, and place your affections on a worthier object: For why should you make me miserable, and yourself not happy? By this means you will do all that is now in your power to restore to me the affection of my friends; and, if That can be, it will leave me in as happy a state as you found me in. You need only to say, That you see there are no Hopes, as you will perhaps complaisantly call it, of succeeding with me [And indeed, Sir, there cannot be a greater truth]; and that you will therefore no more think of me; but turn your thoughts another way.

Your compliance with this request will lay me under the highest obligation to your generosity, and make me ever

Your Well-wisher, and humble Servant, CLARISSA HARLOWE.

To Miss CLARISSA HARLOWE.

These most humbly present.

Dearest Mifs,

YOUR Letter has had a very contrary effect upon me, to what you feem to have expected from it. It has double convinced me of the excellency of your mind, and of the honour of your disposition. Call it felfish, or what you please, I must persist in my suit; and happy shall I be, if by patience and perseverance, and a steady and unalterable devoir, I may at last overcome the difficulty laid in my way.

As your good Parents, your Uncles, and other friends, are absolutely determined you shall never have Mr. Lovelace, if they can help it; and as I presume no other person is in the way; I will contentedly wait the issue of this matter. And forgive me, dearest

Mis;

Miss; but a person should sooner persuade me to give up to him my Estate, as an instance of my generosity, because he could not be happy without it, than I would a much more valuable treasure, to promote the selicity of another, and make his way easier to circumvent myself.

Pardon me, dear Miss; but I must persevere, tho' I am sorry you suffer on my account, as you are pleased to think; for I never before saw the woman I could love: And while there is any hope, and that you remain undisposed of to some happier man, I must and will be

. I.

our

me

our

and

not in in

my

as

nly

will

h];

but

un-

ake

VE.

pon

it.

ll it

it;

ver-

her

ave

ıme

vait

reft

is;

Your faithful and obsequious Admirer,

March 16.

ROGER SOLMES.

Mr. James Harlowe, To Miss Cl. Harlowe.

March 16.

WHAT a fine whim you took into your head, to write a Letter to Mr. Solmes, to persuade him to give up his pretensions to you!—Of all the pretty romantic slights you have delighted in, this was certainly one of the most extraordinary. But to say nothing of what fires us all with indignation against you (your owning your prepossession in a villain's favour, and your impertinence to Me, and your Sister, and your Uncles; one of which has given it you home, whild); how can you lay at Mr. Solmes's door the usage you so bitterly complain of?—You know, little fool as you are, that it is your sondness for Lovelace that has brough upon you all these things; and which would have happened whether Mr. Solmes had honoured you with his addresses or not.

As you must needs know This to be true, consider, pretty witty Miss, if your fond love-sick heart can let you consider, what a fine figure all your expostulations with Us, and charges upon Mr. Solmes, make!—With what propriety do you demand of him to restore

Vot. I.

LE

for bul

En

and

dro

ral

a f

pro

He

litt

mo

Sig

lov lik

eve

par

pai

the

of

offi Da

Ro

ag

in a p tin

my

the

off

he

call it; for if you thought our favour so, you would restore it to yourself) since it is yet in your own power to do so? Therefore, Miss Pert, none of your pathetics, except in the right place. Depend upon it, whether you have Mr. Solmes, or not, you shall never have your heart's delight, the vile Rake Lovelace, if our parents, if our Uncles, if I, can hinder it: No! you fallen angel, you shall not give your Father and Mother such a Son, nor me such a Brother, in giving yourself that prossigate wretch for a Husband And so set your heart at rest, and lay aside all thoughts of him, if ever you expect forgiveness, reconciliation, or a kind opinion, from any of your family; but especially from him, who, at present, styles himself

Your Brother,

JAMES HARLOWE.

P. S. I know your knack at Letter-writing. If you fend me an answer to this, I will return it unopened; for I will not argue with your perverseness in so plain a case.—Only once for all, I was willing to put you right as to Mr. Solmes; whom I think to blame to trouble his head about you.

LETTER XXXIV.

Mr. LOVELACE, To JOHN BELFORD, Efq.

Friday, March 17.

Receive, with great pleasure, the early and chearful assurances of your Loyalty and Love. And let our principal and most trusty friends named in my last know that I do.

I would have thee, Jack, come down, as foon as thou canft. I believe I shall not want the others so foon. Yet they may come down to Lord M's. I will be there, if not to receive them, to satisfy my Lord, that there is no new mischief in hand, which will require his second intervention.

For

For thyself, thou must be constantly with me: Not for my Security: The family dare do nothing but bully: They bark only at a distance: But for my Entertainment: That thou mayst, from the Latin and the English Classics, keep my love sick Soul from drooping.

ely

blu

ver

ie-

le-

er

if

0!

nd

ng

fo

m,

nd

m

E.

OU

nin

to

r-

et

aft

as

10

I

h

or

Thou hadst best come to me here, in thy old corporal's coat: Thy servant out of livery; and to be upon a samiliar foot with me, as a distant relation, to be provided for by thy interest above—I mean not in Heaven, thou mayst be sure. Thou wilt find me at a little Alehouse; they call it an Inn: The White Hart; most terribly wounded (but by the weather only) the Sign:—In a forry village; within five miles from Harlowe-Place. Every body knows Harlowe-Place; for, like Versailles, it is sprung up from a dunghill, within every elderly person's remembrance. Every poor body, particularly, knows it. But that only for a few years past, since a certain angel has appeared there among the sons and daughters of men.

The people here at the Hart are poor, but honest; and have gotten it into their heads, that I am a man of quality in disguise; and there is no reigning in their officious respect. Here is a pretty little smirking Daughter; Seventeen six days ago. I call her my Rose-bud. Her grandmother (for there is no Mother) a good neat old woman, as ever filled a wicker chair in a chimney-corner, has besought me to be merciful to her.

This is the right way with me. Many and many a pretty rogue had I spared, whom I did not spare, had my power been acknowledged, and my mercy in time implored. But the Debellare superbos should be my motto, were I to have a new one.

This simple chit (for there is a simplicity in her thou wouldst be highly pleased with: All humble; all officious; all innocent—I love her for her humility, her officiousness, and even for her innocence) will be pretty

L

wi

th

for

Tto

the

th

fai

ful

th

ev

fci

tu

2 1

wh d'o

wa

To

bu

no

he

Ba

fas

be

fig

an

Fa

he

kn

no

W

pretty amusement to thee; while I combat with the weather, and dodge and creep about the walls and purlieus of Harlowe-Place. Thou wilt see in her mind, all that her superiors have been taught to conceal, in order to render themselves less natural, and of confequence less pleasing.

But I charge thee, that thou do not (what I would not permit myself to do for the world—I charge thee, that thou do not) crop my Rose-bud. She is the only flower of fragrance, that has blown in this vicinage for ten years past; or will for ten years to come: For I have looked backward to the have-been's, and forward to the will-be's; having but too much leisure upon my hands in my present waiting.

I never was so honest for so long together since my matriculation. It behaves me fo to be-Some way or other, my recess at this little Inn may be found out; and it will then be thought that my Rose bud has attracted me. A report in my favour, from simplicities fo amiable, may establish me; for the Grandmother's relation to my Rose bud may be sworn to: And the Father is an honest poor man: Has no joy, but in his Rose-bud.—O Jack! spare thou therefore (for I shall leave thee often alone with her, spare thou) my Rosebud !- Let the rule I never departed from, but it cost me a long regret, be observed to my Rose-bud! Never to ruin a poor girl, whose simplicity and innocence were all she had to trust to; and whose fortunes were too low to fave her from the rude contempts of worle minds than her own, and from an indigence extreme: Such a one will only pine in fecret; and at last, perhaps, in order to refuge herself from flanderous tongues and virulence, be induced to tempt fome guilty stream, or feek her end in the knee-incircling garter, that, peradventure, was the first attempt of abandoned Love .-No defiances will my Rose-bud breathe; no self dependent, thee doubting watchfulness (indirectly challenging thy inventive machinations to do their worft) will will she assume. Unsuspicious of her danger, the Lamb's throat will hardly shun thy knife!—O be not thou the Butcher of my Lambkin!

L. I.

the

purind,

, in

con-

ould

arge.

ne is

this's to en's.

uch

my

y or

ut;

at-

ties

er's

the

his nall

fe-

coft

Ve-

nce

ere

rfe

re:

erles

m,

er-

e-

al-

ft)

Illi

The less be thou so, for the reason I am going to give thee-The gentle heart is touched by Love: Her foft bosom heaves with a passion she has not yet found a name for. I once caught her eye following a young carpenter, a widow neighbour's fon, living [to speak in her dialect] at the little white house over the way, a gentle youth he also seems to be, about three years older than herself: Play-mates from infancy, till his Eighteenth and her Fifteenth year furnished a reason for a greater distance in shew, while their hearts gave a better for their being nearer than ever-For I foon perceived the Love reciprocal. scrape and a bow at first seeing his pretty mistres; turning often to falute her following eye; and, when a winding lane was to deprive him of her fight, his whole body turned round, his hat more reverently d'offed than before. This answered (for, unseen, I was behind her) by a low courtefy, and a figh, that Johnny was too far off to hear!—Happy Whelp! faid I to myfelf!—I withdrew; and in trip my Rofebud, as if fatished with the dumb shew, and wishing nothing beyond it.

I have examined the little heart. She has made me her confident. She owns, she could love Johnny Barton very well: And Johnny Barton has told her, He could love her better than any maiden he ever saw—But, alas! it must not be thought of. Why not be thought of!—She don't know!—And then she sighed: But Johnny has an Aunt, who will give him an hundred pounds, when his time is out; and her Father cannot give her but a few things, or so, to set her out with; and tho' Johnny's Mother says, she knows not where Johnny would have a prettier, or notabler wise, yet—And then she sighed again—What signifies talking?—I would not have Johnny

be

be unhappy and poor for me !- For what good would that do me, you know, Sir!

What would I give [By my Soul, my angel will indeed reform me, if her friends implacable folly ruin us not both!—What would I give] to have so innocent and so good a heart, as either my Rose-bud's, or Johnny's!

I have a confounded mischievous one—by nature too, I think!—A good motion now-and-then rises from it: But it dies away presently—A love of intrigue—An invention for mischief—A triumph in subduing—Fortune encouraging and supporting—And a constitution—What signifies palliating? But I believe

I had been a rogue, had I been a plough-boy.

But the devil's in this Sex? Eternal misguiders. Who, that has once trespassed with them, ever recovered his virtue? And yet where there is not virtue, which nevertheless we free-livers are continually plotting to destroy, what is there even in the ultimate of our wishes with them?—Preparation and Expessation are in a manner every thing: Respectation indeed may be something, if the mind be hardened above feeling the guilt of a pass trespass: But the Fruition, what is there in that? And yet That being the end, nature will be satisfied with it.

See what grave reflections an innocent subject will produce! It gives me some pleasure to think, that it is not out of my power to reform: But then, Jack, I am asraid I must keep better company than I do at present—For we certainly harden one another. But be not cast down, my boy; there will be time enough to give the whole fraternity warning to chuse another leader: And I fancy thou wilt be the man.

Mean time, as I make it my rule, whenever I have committed a very capital enormity, to do some good by way of atonement; and as I believe I am a pretty deal indebted to that score: I intend, before I leave these parts (successfully shall I leave them I hope, or I shall fore, my I A shall

LET

I sha

revet

hund

to m

I H reft the let in line forfe ture nor that but yet with clin of i greathe con afte

Let

her req her tha I shall be tempted to double the mischief by way of revenge, tho' not to my Rose-bud any) to join an hundred pounds to Johnny's Aunt's hundred pounds, to make one innocent couple happy.—I repeat therefore, and for half-a-dozen more therefores. Spare thou my Rose-bud.

An interruption-Another Letter anon; and both shall go together.

L. I.

puld

will

uin

nod's,

ure fes

in-da

eve

rs.

0-ıe,

ot-

of

ian

ay

ng

15

re

ill

it

k,

at ut

h er

ye

bo

ty

70

LETTER XXXV.

Mr. LOVELACE, To JOHN BELFORD, Efq;

I HAVE found out by my watchful Spy almost as many of my charmer's motions, as of those of the rest of her relations. It delights me to think how the rascal is caressed by the Uncles and Nephew; and let into their secrets; yet it proceeds all the time by my line of direction. I have charged him, however, on sorfeiture of his present weekly stipend, and my sure savour, to take care, that neither my Beloved, nor any of the samily, suspect him: I have told him that he may indeed watch her egresses and regresses; but that only keep off other servants from her paths; yet not to be seen by her himself.

The dear creature has tempted him, he told them, with a Bribe [which she never offered] to convey a Letter [which she never wrote] to Miss Howe; he believes, with one inclosed (perhaps to me): But he declined it: And he begged they would take no notice of it to her. This brought him a stingy shilling; great applause; and an injunction followed it to all the servants, for the strictest look-out, less she should contrive some way to send it—And, about an-hour after, an order was given him to throw himself in her way; and (expressing his concern for denying her request) to tender his service to her, and to bring them her Letter: Which it will be proper for him to report that she has refused to give him.

Now

Now feeft thou not, how many good ends this contrivance answers?

In the first place, the Lady is secured by it, against her own knowledge, in the liberty allowed her of takeing her private walks in the garden: For this attempt has confirmed them in their belief, that now they have turned off her maid, the has no way to fend a Letter out of the house: If she had, she would not have run the rifque of tempting a fellow who had not been in her secret-So that she can prosecute unsuspectedly her correspondence with me, and Miss Howe.

In the next place, it will perhaps afford me an opportunity of a private interview with her, which I am meditating, let her take it as fhe will; having found out by my Spy (who-can keep off every-body else) that she goes every morning and evening to a Woodhouse remote from the dwelling-house, under pretence of vifiting and feeding a fet of Bantampoultry, which were produced from a Breed that was her Grandfather's, and of which for that reason she is very fond; as also of some other curious fowls brought from the same place. I have an account of all her motions here. - And as the has owned to me in one of her Letters that the corresponds privately with Miss Howe, I presume it is by this way.

The interview I am meditating, will produce her consent, I hope, to other favours of the like kind: For, should she not chuse the place in which I am expecting to fee her, I can attend her any-where in the rambling, Dutch-taste garden, whenever she will permit me that honour: For my implement, hight Joseph Leman, has procured me the opportunity of getting two keys made to the garden door (one of which I have given him, for reasons good); which door opens to the haunted Coppice, as tradition has made the fervants think it; a man having been found hanging in it about twenty years ago: And Joseph, upon proper notice, will leave it unbolted.

But

noul adve me, kno will over

LET

not T him ever he k prov his c

B this my l ceed only feel tive I have fee thou to c Jupi B

ful,

thall my i bid i gent conf no a relia who at al But I was obliged previously to give him my honour, that no mischief should happen to any of my adversaries, from this liberty: For the fellow tells me, he loves all his masters: And, only that he knows I am a man of honour; and that my alliance will do credit to the family; and after prejudices are overcome, ever-body will think so; or he would not for the world act the part he does.

There never was a rogue, who had not a falvo to himself for being so.—What a praise to honesty, that every man pretends to it, even at the instant that he knows he is pursuing the methods that will perhaps prove him a knave to the whole world, as well as to his own conscience!

. I.

this

inst

ke-

mpt

ave

tter

in

dly

an h I

ing

ody

0 2

der

ım-

was The wis

of

me

ely

her

nd:

am

in

will ight

of

of ich

has

ind

ph,

But

LET. 35.

But what this stupid family can mean, to make all this necessary, I cannot imagine. My Revenge and my Love are uppermost by turns. If the latter succeed not, the gratifying of the former will be my only consolation: And, by All that's good, they shall feel it; altho' for it I become an exile from my native country for ever.

I will throw myself into my Charmer's presence. I have twice already attempted it in vain. I shall then see what I may depend upon from her favour. If I thought I had no prospect of that, I should be tempted to carry her off.—That would be a rape worthy of a Jupiter!

But all gentle shall be my movements: All respectful, even to reverence, my address to her—Her hand shall be the only witness to the pressure of my lip—my trembling lip: I know it will tremble, if I do not bid it tremble. As soft my sight, as the sight of my gentle Rose-bud. By my humility will I invite ber considence: The loneliness of the place shall give me no advantage: To dissipate her sears, and engage her reliance upon my honour for the suture, shall be my whole endeavour: But little will I complain of, not at all will I threaten, those who are continually threatening

LET

I

And

emo

mou

foun

bve-

fears

geth

The

WOU

tion

with most his b

the

that

refer tify

him

ing

my !

clari

rash

For.

rece

lo li

mife

be a

ever

have to o

maf

per

H

B

ening me: But yet with a view to act the part of Dryden's Lion; to secure my Love, or to let loose my vengeance upon my hunters.

What the his mighty soul his grief contains?
He meditates revenge who least complains:
And like a lion slumh'ring in his way,
Or sleep dissembling, while he waits his prey,
His fearless foes within his distance draws; Constrains his rearing, and contracts his paws:
Till at the last, his time for fury found,
He shoots with sudden vengeance from the ground:
The prostrate vulgar passes o'er, and spares;
But, with a lordly rage, his hunters tears.

LETTER XXXVI.

Miss CLARISSA HARLOWE, To Miss Howe.

Saturday, March 18.

I Have been frighted out of my wits—Still am in a manner out of breath—Thus occasioned—I went down, under the usual pretence, in hopes to find something from you. Concerned at my disappointment, I was returning from the Woodhouse, when I heard a rustling as of somebody behind a stack of wood. I was extremely surprised: But still more, to behold a man coming from behind the surthermost stack. O, thought I, at that moment, the sin of a prohibited correspondence!

In the same point of time that I saw him, he besought me not to be frighted: And, still nearer approaching me, threw open a horseman's coat: And who should it be but Mr. Lovelace!—I could not scream out (yet attempted to scream, the moment I saw a man; and again, when I saw who it was); for I had no voice: And had I not caught hold of a prop which supported the old roof, I should have funk.

I had

I had hitherto, as you know, kept him at a distance: And now, as I recovered myself, judge of my first emotions, when I recollected his character from every mouth of my family; his enterprising temper; and found myself alone with him, in a place so near a bye-lane, and so remote from the house.

But his respectful behaviour soon diffipated these fears, and gave me others; left we should be seen together, and information of it given to my Brother: The consequences of which, I could readily think, would be, if not further mischief, an imputed affignation, a stricter confinement, a forfeited correspondence with you, my beloved friend, and a pretence for the most violent compulsion: And neither the one fet of reflections, nor the other, acquitted him to me for his bold intrusion.

As foon therefore as I could speak, I expressed with the greatest warmth my displeasure; and told him, that he cared not how much he exposed me to the resentment of all my friends, provided he could gratify his own impetuous humour. I then commanded him to leave the place that moment; and was hurrying from him, when he threw himself in the way at my feet, befeeching my stay for one moment; declaring, that he suffered himself to be guilty of this rashness, as I thought it, to avoid one much greater:for, in thort, he could not bear the hourly infults he received from my family, with the thoughts of having to little interest in my favour, that he could not promile himself that his patience and forbearance would be attended with any other issue than to lose me for ever, and be triumphed over and infulted upon it.

This man, you know, has very ready knees. You have faid, that he ought, in small points, frequently to offend, on purpose to shew what an address he is mafter of.

of

ofe

na

ent

ne-

nt,

ard

I da

0, ted

be-

ap-

Ind

not

nt I

for

fa

ave

had

He ran on, expressing his apprehensions that a temper so gentle and obliging, as he said mine was, to

LI

tio

Bu

the

hav

rela

too

fro

die

ma

to c

Soli

fere

mar

WOL

natu

view

bles

noti

nigh

him,

had

happ

had 1

as fai

thade

ever

follor

mitte fidera

inten

jealou

rathe diftan

in/igni

inflam

Vo

A

I

H

every-body but him (and a dutifulness so exemplary inclined me to do my part to others, whether they did theirs or not by me) would be wrought upon in favour of a man set up in part to be revenged upon myself, for my Grandsather's envied distinction of me; and in part to be revenged upon him, for having given life to one, who would have taken his; and now sought to deprive him of hopes dearer to him than life.

I told him he might be assured, that the severity and ill usage I met with would be far from effecting the proposed end: That altho' I could, with great sincerity, declare for a single Life (which had always been my choice); and particularly, that if ever I married if they would not insist upon the man I had an aversion to, it should not be with the man they disliked—

He interrupted me here: He hoped I would forgive him for it; but he could not help expressing his great concern, that, after so many instances of his passionate and obsequious devotion-

And pray, Sir, faid I, let me interrupt you in my turn;—Why don't you affert, in still plainer words, the obligation you have laid me under by this your boasted devotion? Why don't you let me know, in terms as high as your implication, that a perseverance I have not wished for, which has set all my relations at variance with me, is a merit that throws upon me the guilt of ingratitude for not answering it as you seem to expect?

I must forgive him, he said, if he, who pretended only to a comparative merit (and otherwise thought no man living could deserve me) had presumed to hope for a greater share in my savour, than he had hitherto met with, when such men as Mr. Symmes, Mr. Wyerley, and now, lastly, so vile a reptile as this Solmes, however discouraged by myself, were made his competitors. As to the perseverance I mentioned,

tioned, it was impossible for him not to persevere: But I must needs know, that were he not in being. the terms Solmes had proposed were such, as would have involved me in the fame difficulties with my relations that I now laboured under. He therefore took the liberty to fay, that my favour to him, far from encreasing those difficulties, would be the readiest way to extricate me from them. They had made it impossible [he told me, with too much truth]. to oblige them any way, but by facrificing myfelf to Solmes. They were well apprifed besides of the difference between the two; one, whom they hoped to manage as they pleafed; the other, who could and would protect me from every infult; and who had natural prospects much superior to my Brother's foolish views of a Title.

How comes this man to know fo well all our foibles? But I more wonder, how he came to have a notion of meeting me in this place?

I was very uneasy to be gone; and the more as the night came on apace. But there was no getting from him, till I had heard a great deal more of what he had to fay.

I.

ary

ney

in

oon

of ing

and

nim

rity

ing

fin-

rays

er I

had

give

reat

nate

my ords,

your, in

ance

tions

n me

you

nded

ought ed to

had ile as were men-

oned,

As he hoped, that I would one day make him the happiest man in the world, he assured me, that he had so much regard for my fame, that he would be as far from advising any step that was likely to cast a shade upon my reputation (altho' that step was to be ever so much in his own favour) as I would be to follow fuch advice. But fince I was not to be permitted to live fingle, he would fubmit it to my consideration, whether I had any way but one to avoid the intended violence to my inclinations-My Father fo jealous of his authority: Both my Uncles in my Father's way of thinking: My Coufin Morden at a distance: My Uncle and Aunt Hervey awed into insignificance, was his word: My Brother and Sifter inflaming every one: Solmes's offers captivating: VOL. I.

Miss Howe's Mother rather of a party with them, for motives respecting example to her own Daughter.

And then he asked me, if I would receive a Letter from Lady Betty Lawrance, on this occasion: For Lady Sarah Sadleir, he said, having lately lost her only child, hardly looked into the world, or thought of it farther than to wish him married, and preserably to all the women in the world, with me.

To be fure, my dear, there is a great deal in what the man faid—I may be allowed to fay This without an imputed glow or throb.—But I told him nevertheless, that altho' I had great honour for the Ladies he was related to, yet I should not chuse to receive a Letter on a subject that had a tendency to promote an end I was far from intending to promote: That it became me, ill as was treated at present, to hope every-thing, to bear every-thing, and to try everything: When my Father saw my stedsastness, and that I would die rather than have Mr. Solmes, he would perhaps recede-

Interrupting me, he represented the unlikelihood there was of that, from the courses they had entered upon; which he thus enumerated: - Their engaging Mrs. Howe against me, in the first place, as a person I might have thought to fly to, if pushed to desperation: - My Brother continually buzzing in my Father's ears, that my Coufin Morden would foon arrive, and then would infift upon giving me possession of my Grandfather's Estate, in pursuance of the Will; which would render me independent of my Father: - Their difgraceful confinement of me:-Their dismissing so fuddenly my fervant, and fetting my Sister's over me: -Their engaging my Mother, contrary to her own judgment, against me: These, he said, were all so many flagrant proofs that they would flick at nothing to carry their point; and were what made him inexpressibly uneasy.

He appealed to me, whether ever I knew my Fa-espect Auth ance sever me) in th

LET

ther

of the permital of the permita

H

verel

that ranto voca
how
be.— him,
as w fuch would to fat to be he wiferen

felf 1

ther gina affer he v and inte ever and ing 1.

10

75

10

15

at

-

at 1-

res

2 n

it

pe

nd

ne

bc

ed

ıg

on

e-

2-

e,

ny

ch

eir

fo

e:

vn

So

ng

X-

a-

roc

ther recede from any resolution he had once fixed; especially, if he thought either his Prerogative, or his Authority, concerned in the question. His acquaintance with our Family, he said, enabled him to give several instances (but they would be too grating to me) of an arbitrariness that had sew examples even in the Families of Princes: An arbitrariness, which the most excellent of women, my Mother, too severely experienced.

He was proceeding, as I thought, with reflections of this fort; and I angrily told him, I would not permit my Father to be reflected upon; adding, That his severity to me, however unmerited, was not a warrant for me to dispense with my duty to him.

He had no pleasure, he said, in urging any-thing that could be so construed; for, however well-warranted he was to make such reflections from the provocations they were continually giving him, he knew how offensive to me any liberties of this fort would be.—And yet he must own, that it was painful to him, who had youth and passions to be allowed for, as well as others; and who had always valued himfelf upon speaking his mind; to curb himself, under such treatment. Nevertheless, his consideration for me would make him confine himself, in his observations, to facts that were too flagrant, and too openly avowed. to be disputed. It could not therefore justly displease, he would venture to fay, if he made this natural inference from the premises, That if such were my Father's behaviour to a Wife, who disputed not the imaginary Prerogative he was fo unprecedently fond of afferting, what room had a Daughter to hope, that he would depart from an Authority he was fo earnest, and so much more concerned, to maintain! - Familyinterests at the same time engaging; an aversion, however causely conceived, stimulating; my Brother's and Sifter's refentments and felfish views co-operateing; and my banishment from their presence deprive-M 2

L

pr

af

ha

A

to fu

of

be

tio

fel

op

pro

cri

alle

to life

cha

ma

eve

his

can fak tha

as ] is |

Mr

not

ture his

Th

fhal

a lo

frie

mak

ticu

and

ing me of all personal plea or entreaty in my own favour.

How unhappy, my dear, that there is but too much reason for these observations, and for this inference; made, likewise, with more coolness and respect to my family than one would have apprehended from a man fo much provoked, and of passions so high, and generally thought uncontroulable!

Will you not question me about throbs and glows, if, from fuch instances of a command over his fiery temper, for my fake, I am ready to infer, that were my friends capable of a reconciliation with him, he might be affected by arguments apparently calculated for his present and future good! Nor is it a very bad indication, that he has fuch moderate notions of that very high Prerogative in Husbands, of which we in our family have been accustomed to hear so much.

He represented to me, that my present disgraceful confinement was known to all the world: That neither my Sifter nor Brother scrupled to represent me as an obliged and favoured child in a state of actual rebellion:-That, nevertheless, every-body who knew me was ready to justify me for an aversion to a man whom every-body thought utterly unworthy of me, and more fit for my Sifter: That unhappy as he was, in not having been able to make any greater impreffion upon me in his favour, all the world gave me to him:-Nor was there but one objection made to him, by his very enemies (his birth, his fortunes, his prospects all unexceptionable, and the latter splendid); and that objection, he thanked God, and my example, was in a fair way of being removed for ever: Since he had feen his error, and was heartily fick of the courses he had followed; which, however, were far less enormous than malice and envy had reprefented them to be. But of This he should say the lefs, as it were much better to justify himself by his actions, than by the most solemn affeverations and promises. And then complimenting my person, he assured me (for that he always loved virtue, altho' he had not followed its rules as he ought) that he was still more captivated with the graces of my mind: And would frankly own, that till he had the honour to know me, he had never met with an inducement sufficient to enable him to overcome an unhappy kind of prejudice to Matrimony; which had made him before impenetrable to the wishes and recommendations of all his relations.

promifes.

You fee, my dear, he scruples not to speak of himfelf, as his enemies speak of him. I can't say, but his openness in these particulars gives a credit to his other professions. I should easily, I think, detect an hypocrite: And this man particularly, who is faid to have allowed himself in great liberties, were he to pretend to instantaneous lights and convictions—at this time of life too-Habits, I am sensible, are not so easily changed. You have always joined with me in remarking, that he will fpeak his mind with freedom, even to a degree of unpoliteness sometimes; and that his very treatment of my family is a proof that he cannot make a mean court to any-body for interestlake-What pity, where there are fuch laudable traces, that they should have been so mired, and choaked up, as I may fay!—We have heard, that the man's head is better than his heart: But do you really think Mr. Lovelace can have a very bad heart? Why should not there be fomething in Blood in the human creature, as well as in the ignobler animals? None of his family are exceptionable—but himself, indeed. The characters of the Ladies are admirable—But I shall incur the imputation I wish to avoid. Yet what a look of cenforiousness does it carry in an unsparing friend, to take one to talk for doing that justice, and making those charitable inferences in favour of a particular person, which one ought without scruple to do, and to make, in the behalf of any other man living? M 3

, his did);

I.

a-

00 fe-

ect

m gh,

ws,

ery

ere

he

ted

bad

hat

in eful

nei-

e as

re-

new man

me,

was,

ref-

e to

ever:

cam-

epre-

y his nifes.

L

d

h

n

k

n

(

h

ir

V

F

d

ti

h

to

fa

n

n

in

II

n

W

2

C

He then again pressed me to receive a Letter of offered protection from Lady Betty. He said, that people of birth stood a little too much upon punctilio; as people of virtue also did (But indeed Birth, worthily lived up to, was Virtue: Virtue, Birth; the inducements to a decent punctilio the same; the origin of both, one) [How came this notion from him!]—: Else, Lady Betty would write to me: But she would be willing to be first apprised, that her offer would be well received—as it would have the appearance of being made against the liking of one part of my samily; and which nothing would induce her to make, but the degree of unworthy persecution which I actually laboured under, and had reason further to apprehend.

I told him, that however greatly I thought myself obliged to Lady Betty Lawrance, if this offer came from herself; yet it was easy to see to what it led. It might look like vanity in me perhaps to fay, That this urgency in him, on this occasion, wore the face of art, in order to engage me into measures from which I might not easily extricate myself. I said, that I should not be affected by the splendor of even a Royal Title. Goodness, I thought, was Greatness: That the excellent characters of the Ladies of his family weighed more with me, than the confideration that they were Half-fisters to Lord M. and Daughters of an Earl: That he would not have found encouragement from me, had my friends been confenting to his address, if he had only a mere relative merit to those Ladies: Since, in that case, the very reasons that made me admire them, would have been fo many objections to their kinsman.

I then affured him, that it was with infinite concern, that I had found myfelf drawn into an epiftolary correspondence with him; especially since that correspondence had been prohibited:—And the only agreeable use I could think of making of this unexpected pected and undefired Interview, was, to let him know, that I should from henceforth think myself obliged to discontinue it. And I hoped, that he would not have the thought of engaging me to carry it on by menacing my relations.

There was light enough to distinguish, that he looked very grave upon this. He so much valued my free choice, he faid, and my unbiased favour (scorning to set himself upon a footing with Solmes in the compulfory methods used in that man's behalf) that he should hate himself, were he capable of a view of intimidating me by fo very poor a method. But, nevertheless, there were two things to be considered: First, that the continual outrages he was treated with; the spies let over him, one of which he had detected; the indignities all his family were likewise treated with; as also, myself; avowedly in malice to him, or he should not presume to take upon himself to refent for me, without my leave [The artful wretch faw he would have lain open here, had he not thus guarded -All these considerations called upon him to thew a proper refentment: And he would leave it to me to judge, whether it would be reasonable for him, as a man of spirit, to bear such insults, if it were not for my fake. I would be pleased to consider, in the next place, whether the fituation I was in (a prifoner in my Father's house, and my whole family determined to compel me to marry a man unworthy of me; and that speedily, and whether I consented or not) admitted of delay in the preventive measures he was defirous to put me upon, in the last refort only. Nor was there a necessity, he faid, if I were actually in Lady Betty's protection, that I should be his, if, afterwards, I should see any-thing objectible in his conduct.

But what would the world conclude would be the end, I demanded, were I, in the last resort, as he

M 4

ex-Sted

that only

L. I.

r of that

lio;

-10W the

igin

-:

ould

d be e of fa-

ake,

ctu-

pre-

yfelf

ame

. It

hat

face

rom

that

n a

res:

his

tion ters

ou-

g to

t to

that ob-

on-fto-

LE

gu

ha

hir

we

my

ing

or

my

16 pro

terr

file

not

and

thei

Wi

fucl

that lue

WOU

by I

fo de

inter

fion

defir

to'ur

he w plete

I be

ing-

1

V

F

1 proposed, to throw myself into the protection of his

And what less did the world think now, he asked, than that I was confined that I might not? You are to confider, Madam, you have not now an option; and to whom is it owing that you have not; and that you are in the power of those (Parents why should I call them?) who are determined, that you shall not have an option. All I propose is, that you will embrace such a protection;—but not till you have tried every way, to avoid the necessity for it.

And give me leave to fay, proceeded he, that if a correspondence on which I have founded all my hopes, is, at this critical conjuncture, to be broken off; and if you are resolved not to be provided against the worst; it must be plain to me, that you will at last yield to That worst—Worst to me only—It cannot be to you—And then! [and he put his hand clinched to his forehead] how shall I bear the supposition?—Then will you be that Solmes's!—But, by all that's Sacred, neither He, nor your Brother, nor your Uncles shall enjoy their triumph—Perdition seize my Soul, if they shall!

The man's vehemence frightened me: Yet in refentment, I would have left him; but, throwing himfelf at my feet again, Leave me not thus—I befeech you, dearest Madam, leave me not thus, in despair. I kneel not, repenting of what I have vowed in such a case as That I have supposed. I re-vow it, at your feet!—And so he did. But think not it is by way of menace, or to intimidate you to favour me. If your heart inclines you [and then he rose] to obey your Father (your Brother rather) and to have Solmes; altho' I shall avenge myself on those who have insulted me, for their insults to myself and family; yet will I tear out my heart from This bosom (if possible with my own hands) were it to scruple to give up its arders to a woman capable of such a preference.

I told him, that he talked to me in very high language;

guage; but he might assure himself, that I never would have Mr. Solmes (Yet that this I said not in favour to him) and I had declared as much to my relations, were there not such a man as himself in the world.

Would I declare, that I would still honour him with my correspondence?—He could not bear, that, hopeing to obtain greater instances of my favour, he should forfeit the only one he had to boast of.

I bid him forbear rashness or resentment to any of my family, and I would, for some time at least, till I saw what issue my present trials were likely to have, proceed with a correspondence, which, nevertheless, my heart condemned—

And his spirit him, the impatient creature said, interrupting me, for bearing what he did; when he considered, that the necessity of it was imposed upon him, not by my will (for then would he bear it chearfully, and a thousand times more) but by creatures—And there he stopt.

LET. 36.

is

d,

to

ou

all

ve ry

a

es,

nd

st;

to

-

re-

vill

ei-

en-

all!

re-

im-

ech

air.

uch

our

y of

our

our ies;

Ited

11.1

vith

ar-

lan-

ige;

I told him plainly that he might thank himself (whose indifferent character, as to morals, had given such a handle against him) for all. It was but just, that a man should be spoken evil of, who set no value upon his reputation.

He offered to vindicate himself: But I told him, I would judge him by his own rule—by his actions, not by his professions.

Were not his enemies, he, said, so powerful, and so determined; and had they not already shewn their intentions in such high acts of even cruel compulsion; but would leave me to my choice, or to my desire of living single; he would have been content to undergo a twelvementh's probation, or more: Rut he was consident, that one menth would either complete all their purposes, or render them abortive: And I best knew what hopes I had of my Father's recedeing—He did not know him, if I had any.

I faid, I would try every method, that either my 1

h

a

1

E

to

h

h

th

hi

pi

ar

th

fu M

to

fin

no

ha

pal

tio fat

def

faci

duty or my influence upon any of them should suggest, before I would put myself into any other protection: And, if nothing else would do, would resign the envied Estate; and that I dared to say would.

He was contented, he said, to abide that issue. He should be far from wishing me to embrace any other protection, but, as he had frequently said, in the last necessity. But dearest creature, said he, catching my hand with ardor, and pressing it to his lips, if the yielding up that Estate will do—Resign it;—and be mine—And I will corroborate, with all my soul, your resignation!

This was not ungeneroully faid: But what will not these men say to obtain belief, and a power over one?

I made many efforts to go; and now it was so dark, that I began to have great apprehensions. I cannot say from his behaviour: Indeed, he has a good deal raised himself in my opinion by the personal respect, even to reverence, which he paid me during the whole conference: For altho' he slamed out once, upon a supposition that Solmes might succeed, it was upon a supposition that would excuse passion, if anything could, you know in a man pretending to love with servor; altho' it was so levelled, that I could not avoid resenting it.

He recommended himself to my favour at parting, with great earnestness, yet with as great submission; not offering to condition any-thing with me; although the hinted his wishes for another meeting: Which I forbad him ever attempting again in the same place.—And I will own to you, from whom I should be really blameable to conceal any-thing, that his arguments (drawn from the disgraceful treatment I meet with) of what I am to expect, make me begin to apprehend, that I shall be under an obligation to be either the one man's or the other's—And if so, I sancy I shall not incur your blame, were I to say, which of the two it must be. You have said, which it must not be. But,

O my dear, the Single Life is by far the most eligible to me: Indeed it is. And I hope yet to be permitted to make that option.

I got back without observation: But the apprehenfion that I should not, gave me great uneasiness; and made me begin my Letter in a greater flutter than he gave me cause to be in, except at the first seeing him; for then indeed my spirits sailed me; and it was a particular selicity, that, in such a place, in such a fright, and alone with him, I sainted not away.

I should add, That having reproached him with his behaviour the last Sunday at church, he solemnly affured me, That it was not what had been represented to me: That he did not expect to see me there: But hoped to have an opportunity to address himself to my Father, and to be permitted to attend him But that the good Dr. Lewen had perfuaded him not to attempt speaking to any of the family, at that time; observing to him the emotions into which his presence had put every-body. He intended no pride, or haughtiness of behaviour, he assured me; and that the attributing such to him was the effect of that ill-will which he had the mortification to find insuperable: Adding, That when he bowed to my Mother, it was a compliment he intended generally to every one in the pew, as well as to her, whom he fincerely venerated.

If he may be believed (and I should think he would not have come purposely to defy my samily, yet expect favour from me) one may see, my dear, the force of hatred, which misrepresents all things:—Yet why should Shorey (except officiously to please her principals) make a report in his disfavour? He told me, that he would appeal to Dr. Lewen for his justification on this head; adding, That the whole conversation between the Doctor and him turned upon his desire to attempt to reconcile himself to us all, in the face of the Church; and upon the Doctor's endeavour-

M 6

ugorofign

He

her last my the be

our

not ne? s fo

good onal ring nce, was

ing,

love

eally ents with) end,

not no it But,

0

Ĭ

1

ing to distuade him from making such a public overture, till he knew how it would be accepted. But to what purpose his appeal, when I am debarred from seeing that good man, or any one who would advise me what to do in my present difficult situation!

I fancy, my dear, however, that there would hardly be a guilty person in the world, were each suspected or accused person to tell his or her own Story, and be allowed any degree of credit.

var or beyed to a vive

I have written a very long Letter.

To be so particular as you require in subjects of conversation, it is impossible to be short,

I will add to it only the affurance, That I am, and ever will be,

Your affectionate and faithful Friend and Servant,
CLARISSA HARLOWE.

You'll be so good, my dear, as to remember, that the date of your last Letter to me, was the 9th.

LETTER XXXVII.

Miss Howe, To Miss CLARISSA HARLOWE.

Sunday, March 19.

Beg your pardon, my dearest friend, for having given you occasion to remind me of the date of my last. I was willing to have before me as much of the workings of your wise relations as possible; being verily persuaded, that one side or the other would have yielded by this time: And then I should have had some degree of certainty to sound my observations upon. And indeed what can I write that I have not already written?—You know, that I can do nothing but rave at your stupid persecutors: And That you don't like. I have advised you to resume your own Estate: That you won't do. You cannot bear the thoughts of having their Solmes: And Love-

I.

er-

to

om

dly

or

be

n-

ind

E.

hat

ng

ot ich

le;

her

uld

ob-

hat

an

me

not.

ace

lace is refolved you shall be his, let who will say to the contrary. I think you must be either the one man's or the other's. Let us see what their next step will be.

As to Lovelace, while he tells his own flory (haveing also behaved so handsomely on his intrusion in the Woodhouse; and intended so well at Church) who can say, That the man is in the least blameworthy?—Wicked people! to combine against so innocent a man!—But, as I said, Let us see what their next step will be, and what course you will take upon it; and then we may be the more enlightened.

As to your change of style to your Uncles, and Brother and Sister, since they were so fond of attributing to you a regard for Lovelace, and would not be persuaded to the contrary; and since you only strengthened their arguments against yourself by denying it; you did but just as I would have done, in giving way to their suspicions, and trying what That would do—But if—But is—Pray, my dear, indulge me a little—You yourself think it was necessary to apologize to me for that change of style to them—And till you will speak out like a friend to her unquestionable friend, I must teaze you a little—Let it run therefore; for it will run—

If, then, there be not a reason for this change of style, which you have not thought fit to give me, be so good as to watch, as I once before advised you, how the cause for it will come on—Why should it be permitted to steal upon you, and you know nothing of the matter? -

When we get a great cold, we are apt to puzzle ourselves to find out when it began, or how we got it; and when that is accounted for, down we sit contended, and let it have its course; or, if it be very troublesome, take a sweat, or use other means to get rid of it—So my dear, before the malady you wot of, yet wot not of, grows so importunate, as that you must

L

fo

of

at

de

V

fo

p

t

7

must be obliged to sweat it out, let me advise you to mind how it comes on. For I am persuaded, as surely as that I am now writing to you, that the indiscreet violence of your friends on one hand, and the infinuating address of Lovelace on the other, (if the man be not a greater fool than any-body thinks him) will effectually bring it to This, and do all his work for him.

But let it—If it must be Lovelace or Solmes, the choice cannot admit of debate. Yet if all be true that is reported, I should prefer almost any of your other Lovers to either; unworthy as they also are.

But who can be worthy of a Clariffa?

I wish you are not indeed angry with me for harping so much on one string. I must own, that I should think myself inexcusable so to do (the rather, as I am bold enough to imagine it a point out of all doubt from fifty places in your Letters, were I to labour the proof) if you would ingeniously own—

Own what? you'll fay. Why, my Anna Howe, I hope, you don't think, that I am already in

Love !-

No, to be fure! How can your Anna Howe have fuch a thought?—What then shall we call it? You have helped me to a phrase.—A conditional kind of liking!—that's it.—O my friend! Did I not know how much you despise Prudery; and that you are too young, and too lovely, to be a Prude—

But, avoiding such hard names, let me tell you one thing, my dear (which nevertheless I have told you before); and that is This; That I shall think I have reason to be highly displeased with you, if, when you write to me, you endeavour to keep from me any fecret of your heart.

Let me add, that if you would clearly and explicitly tell me, how far Lovelace bas, or has not, a hold in your affections, I could better advise you what to do, than at present I can. You, who are so famed for I.

to

as

n-

he

ne

1)

k

ie

ie

r

d

n

t

for prescience, as I may call it; and than whom no young Lady ever had stronger pretentions to a share of it; have had, no doubt, reasonings in your heart about him, supposing you were to be one day his [No doubt but you have had the same in Solmes's case : Whence the ground for the hatred of the one; and for the conditional liking of the other]: Will you tell me, my dear, what you have thought of Lovelace's best and of his worst? - How far eligible for the first; how far rejectible for the last? - Then weighing both parts in opposite scales, we shall see which is likely to preponderate; or rather which does preponderate. Nothing less than the knowledge of the inmost recesses of your heart, can fatisfy my love and my Friendship. Surely, you are not afraid to trust yourself with a fecret of this nature: if you are, then you may the more allowably doubt me. But I dare fay, you will not own either.—Nor is there, I hope, cause for cither.

Be pleased to observe one thing, my dear, that whenever I have given myself any of those airs of raillery, which have seemed to make you look about you (when, likewise, your case may call for a more serious turn from a sympathizing friend) it has not been upon those passages which are written, tho' perhaps not intended, with such explicitness [Don't be alarmed, my dear!] as leaves little cause of doubt: But only when you affect reserve; when you give new words for common things; when you come with your curiosities, with your conditional likings, and with your Prude-encies [Mind how I spell the word in a case that with every other person defies all prudence—Overt acts of treason all these, against the sovereign friendship we have avowed to each other!

Remember, that you found me out in a moment. You challenged me. I owned directly, that there was only my pride between the man and me; for I could not endure, I told you, to think it in the power of

VOI

im

WE

tin

m ob

th

W

ad

fo

re

n

A

any fellow living to give me a moment's uneafiness. And then my man, as I have elsewhere faid, was not such a one as yours: So I had reason to impute full as much to my own inconsideration, as to his power over me: Nay, more. But still more to yours. For you reasoned me out of the curiosity first; and when the liking was brought to be conditional—why then, you know, I throbbed no more about him.

O! pray now, as you fay, now I have mentioned that my fellow was not such a charming fellow as yours, let Miss Biddulph, Miss Lloyd, Miss Champion, and me have your opinion, how far Figure ought to engage us: With a view to your own case, however—Mind that—as Mr. Tony says—And whether at all, if the man be vain of it; since, as you observe in a former, that vanity is a slop-short pride in such a one, that would make one justly doubt the worthiness of his interior. You, our pattern, so lovely, in feature, so graceful in person, have none of it; and have there fore with the best grace always held, that it is not ex-culable even in a woman.

You must know, that this subject was warmly debated among us in our last conversation; and Miss Lloyd wished me to write to you upon it for your opinion; to which, in every debated case, we always paid the greatest deference. I hope you will not be so much engroffed, by your more weighty cares, as not to have freedom of spirits enough to enter upon the talk. - You know how much we all admire your opinion on fuch topics; which ever produces fomething new and instructive, as you handle the subjects. And pray tell us to what you think it owing, that your man feems fo careful to adorn that felf-adorned person of his! yet fomanages, that one cannot for one's heart think him a coxcomb?-Let this question and the above talks, divert, and not displease you, my dear,-One subject, tho' ever so important, could never yet, engross your capacious mind. If they should displease you, VIIS you, you must recollect the many instances of my impertinence which you have forgiven, and then say, 'This is a mad girl:—But yet I love her!—And she is my own.'

ANNA HOWE.

LETTER XXXVIII.

Miss CLARISSA HARLOWE, To Miss Howe.

Monday, March 20.

YOUR last so sensibly affects me, that I must postpone every other consideration, however weighty, to reply to it: And this I will do very distinctly, and with all the openness of heart which our mutual friendship demands.

But let me observe, in the first place, gratefully observe, That is I have in fifty passages of my Letters given you such undoubted proofs of my value for Mr. Lovelace, that you have spared me for the sake of my explicitness, it is acting by me with a generosity worthy of yourself.

But lives the man, think you, who is so very bad, that he does not give even a doubting mind reason at one time to be better pleased with him than at another? And when that reason offers, is it not just to express one's self accordingly? I would do the man who addresses me as much justice, as if he did not address me: It has such a look of tyranny, it appears so ungenerous, methinks, in our Sex, to use a man worse for his respect to us (no other cause for disrespect occurring) that I would not by any means be that person who should do so.

But, altho' I may intend no more than justice, it will perhaps be difficult to hinder those who know the man's views, from construing it as a partial favour: And especially if the eager-eyed observer has been formerly touched herself, and would triumph that her friend had been no more able to escape than she.

Noble

Noble minds, emulative of perfection (and yet the passion properly directed, I do not take to be an imperfection neither) may be allowed a little generous envy, I think.

If I meant by this a reflection, by way of revenge, it is but a revenge, my dear, in the fost sense of the word. I love, as I have told you, your pleasantry. Altho' at the time your reproof may pain me a little; yet on recollection, when I find in it more of the cautioning friend, than of the satirizing observer, I shall be all gratitude upon it. All the business will be This; I shall be sensible of the pain in the present Letter perhaps; but I shall thank you in the next, and eyer after.

In this way, I hope, my dear, you will account for a little of that sensibility which you will find above, and perhaps still more, as I proceed.—You frequently remind me, by an excellent example, your own to me, that I must not spare you!

I am not conscious, that I have written any-thing of this man, that has not been more in his difpraise than in his favour. Such is the man, that I think I must have been faulty, and ought to take myself to account, if I had not: But if you think otherwise, I will not put you upon labouring the proof, as you call it. My conduct must then have a faulty appearance at least, and I will endeavour to rectify it. But of this I affure you, That whatever interpretation my words were capable of, I intended not any referve to you. I wrote my heart at the time:-If I had had thoughts of disguising it, or been conscious, that there was reason for doing so, perhaps I had not given you the opportunity of remarking upon my curiofity after his relations efteem for me; nor upon my conditional liking, and such-like. All I intended by the first, I believe, I honestly told you at the time: To that Letter I therefore refer, whether it make for me, or against me: And by the other, that I might bear in mind,

the

mous

the

ry.

le;

the

, I

ill

xt,

for

ve,

tly

to

ng

1

to

all

of

to

ad

re

ou

er

I

at

or in

d,

mind, what it became a person of my Sex and Character to be and to do, in such an unhappy situation, where the imputed Love is thought an undutiful, and therefore a criminal passion; and where the supposed object of it is a man of faulty morals too. And I am sure you will excuse my desire of appearing at those times the person I ought to be; had I no other view in it but to merit the continuance of your good opinion.

But that I may acquit myfelf of having referves

-O, my dear, I must here break off!-

LETTER XXXIX.

Miss CLARISSA HARLOWE, To Miss Howe.

Monday, March 20.

THIS Letter will account to you, my dear, for my abrupt breaking off in the answer I was writing to yours of yesterday; and which, possibly, I shall not be able to finish, and send you till to-morrow or next day; having a great deal to say to the subjects you put to me in it. What I am now to give you are the particulars of another effort made by my friends, thro' the good Mrs. Norton.

It feems they had fent to her yesterday, to be here this day, to take their instructions, and to try what she could do with me. It would, at least, I suppose they thought, have this effect; to render me inexcusable with her; or to let her see, that there was no room for the expostulations she had often wanted to make in my favour to my Mother.

The declaration, that my heart was free, afforded them an argument to prove obstinacy and perverseness upon me; fince it could be nothing else that governed me in my opposition to their wills, if I had no particular esteem for another man: And now, that I have given them reason (in order to obviate this argument) to suppose that I have a preference to another, they are

6 : b

6 127

6 F

6 f

6 D

6 b

mi

bef

ex

Th

you

COL

he

roc

in

W

if y

Wi

Cul

So

ob

pe

ha

the

be

Bu

evi

W

fid

are resolved to carry their schemes into execution as soon as possible. And in order to this, they sent for This good woman, for whom they know I have even a filial regard.

She found assembled my Father and Mother, my Bro:her and Sister, my two Uncles, and my Aunt Hervey.

My Brother acquainted her with all that had passed fince she was last permitted to see me; with the contents of my Letters avowing my regard for Mr. Lovelace (as they all interpreted them); with the substance of their Answers to them; and with their Resolutions.

My Mother spoke next; and delivered herself to

After reciting how many times I had been indulged in my refusals of different men, and the pains she had taken with me, to induce me to oblige my whole family in one instance out, of five or six, and my obstinacy upon it; O my good Mrs. Norton, said the dear Lady, could you have thought, that my Clarissa and your Clarissa was capable of so determined an opposition to the will of parents so indulgent to her? But see what you can do with her. The matter is gone too far to be receded from on our parts.

Her Father had concluded every-thing with Mr. Solmes, not doubting her compliance. Such noble Settlements, Mrs. Norton, and such advantages to the whole family !—In short, she has it in her power to lay an obligation upon us all. Mr. Solmes, know-to lay an obligation upon us all. Mr. Solmes, knowing the has good principles, and hoping by his patience now, and good treatment hereafter, to engage her Gratitude, and by degrees her Love, is willing to overlook All!—

[Overlook All, my dear! Mr. Solmes to overlook All! There's a word!]

So, Mrs. Norton, if you are convinced, that it is a Child's duty to submit to her Parents authority, in the most important point as well as in the least, I

r

n

t

d

-

-

e

S.

0

d

ld

1-

1-

le

1 - .

bs

to er

S.

r.

le

to

er

V-

age

ıg

ok

it

y,

eg

beg you will try your influence over her: I have none: Her Father has none: Her Uncles neither:

'Altho' it is her apparent interest to oblige us All;

' for, on that condition, her Grandfather's Estate is not half of what, living and dying, is purposed to on half of what, living and dying, is purpoled to be done for her. If any body can prevail with her,

'it is you; and I hope you will heartily enter upon this talk.'

The good woman asked, Whether she was permitted to expostulate with them upon the occasion, before she came up to me?

My arrogant Brother told her, she was sent for to expostulate with his Sister, and not with them. And This, Goody Norton [She is always Goody with him!] you may tell her, that the treaty with Mr. Solmes is concluded: That nothing but her compliance with her duty is wanting; of consequence, that there is no room for your expostulation, or hers either.

Be affured of This, Mrs. Norton, faid my Father, in an angry tone, that we will not be baffled by her. We will not appear like fools in This matter, and as if we had no authority over our own Daughter. We will not, in short, be bullied out of our child by a cursed Rake, who had like to have killed our only Son!—And so she had better make a merit of her obedience: For comply she shall, if I live; independent as she thinks my Father's indiscreet bounty has made her of me, her Father. Indeed, since That, she has never been what she was before. An unjust bequest!—And it is likely to prosper accordingly!—But if she marry that vile Lovelace, I will litigate every shilling with her: Tell her so; and that the Will may be set aside, and shall.

My Uncles joined, with equal heat.

My Brother was violent in his declarations.

My Sister put in with vehemence, on the same

My Aunt Hervey was pleafed to fay, There was obliged.

Thus instructed, the good woman came up to me. She told me all that had passed, and was very earnest with me to comply; and so much justice did she to the task imposed upon her, that I more than once thought, that her own opinion went with theirs. But when she saw what an immoveable aversion I had to the man, she lamented with me their determined resolution: And then examined into the sincerity of my declaration, that I would gladly compound with them by living single. Of this being satisfied, she was so convinced that this offer, which, carried into execution, would exclude Lovelace effectually, ought to be accepted, that she would go down (altho' I told her, it was what I had tendered over-and-over to no purpose) and undertake to be guaranty for me on that score.

She went accordingly; but foon returned in tears; being used harshly for urging this alternative: - They had a right to my obedience upon their own terms, they faid: My proposal was an artifice, only to gain time: Nothing but marrying Mr. Solmes should do: They had told me fo before: They should not be at rest till it was done; for they knew what an interest Lovelace had in my heart: I had as good as owned it in my Letters to my Uncles, and Brother and Sifter, altho' I had most disingenuously declared otherwise to my Mother. I depended, they faid, upon their indulgence, and my own power over them: They would not have banished me from their presence, if they had not known that their confideration for me was greater than mine for them. And they would be obey'd, or I never should be restored to their favour, let the confequence be what it would.

My Brother thought fit to tell the good woman, that her whining nonsense did but harden me. There was

LE

was ged

ture

Iw

fone

fhe

foor

Mo

up t

fulp

to a

tion

neve

that it fe

drav

fent

man Sı

pect

a w allor

be ri

polit

ver v foun

at an

my o

to co lome

been

pers

heart

frien

M

SI

E

was a perverseness, he said, in semale minds, a Tragedy-pride, that would make a romantic young creature, such a one as me, risque any-thing to obtain pity. I was of an age, and a turn [the insolent said] to be sond of a Lover-like distress: And my grief (which she pleaded) would never break my heart: I should sooner break That of the best and most indulgent of Mothers. He added, that she might once more go up to me: But that, if she prevailed not, he should suspect, that the man they all hated had sound a way to attach her to his interest.

Every-body blamed him for this unworthy reflection; which greatly affected the good woman. But nevertheless he said, and no-body contradicted him, that if she could not prevail upon her fweet child [as it seems she had fondly called me] she had best withdraw to her own home, and there tarry till she was sent for; and so leave her sweet child to her Father's management.

)

9

,

t

;

5,

n

:

at

ft

it

r,

to

n-

ld

ad

er

rI

n-

ın,

ere

vas

Sure no body ever had so insolent, so hard-hearted a Brother, as I have! So much resignation to be expected from me! So much arrogance, and to so good a woman, and of so fine an understanding, to be allowed in him!

She nevertheless told him, that however she might be ridiculed for speaking of the sweetness of my dispositions, she must take upon her to say, that there never was a sweeter in the Sex: And that she had ever sound, that by mild methods, and gentleness, I might at any time be prevailed upon, even in points against my own judgment and opinion.

My Aunt Hervey hereupon said, It was worth while to consider what Mrs. Norton said: And that she had sometimes allowed herself to doubt, whether I had been begun with by such methods as generous tempers are only to be influenced by, in cases where their hearts are supposed to be opposite to the will of their friends.

L

L

re

I

Bu

yo

OW

is

fan

agi Ic

wil

one

An

unc

gar

hig

fide.

nor

too,

who

to ol

refpo

ther

ed to

by p

poula

confe

by th

able fand

jenfe.

be pa

the in

is vou

Vo

1 7

10

She had both my Brother and Sifter upon her for This: Who referred to my Mother, whether she had not treated me with an indulgence that had hardly any example? at disloter and from a bas

My Mother faid, the must own, that no indulgence had been wanting from her: But the must needs fay, and had often faid it, that the reception I met with on my return from Miss Howe, and the manner in which the proposal of Mr. Solmes was made to me (which was fuch as left nothing to my choice) and before I had had an opportunity to converfe with him, were not what the had by any means approved of.

She was filenced, you will guess by whom, -with, My dear !- my dear !- You have ever fomething to fay, fomething to palliate, for this rebel of a girl!-Remember her treatment of you, of me!-Remember, that the wretch, whom we so justly hate, would not dare to perfift in his purposes, but for her encouragement of him, and obstinacy to us.-Mrs. Norton [angrily to her] go up to her once more-And if you think gentleness will do, you have a commission to be gentle.—If it will not, never make use of that plea again.

Ay, my good woman, faid my Mother, try your force with her. My Sifter Hervey and I will go up to her, and bring her down in our hands, to receive her Father's Bleffing, and affurances of every-body's Love, if the will be prevailed upon: And, in that case, we will all love you the better for your good offices.

She came up to me, and repeated all these passages with tears: But I told her, that after what had passed between us, she could not hope to prevail upon me to comply with measures so wholly my Brother's; and fo much to my aversion.—And then folding me to her maternal bosom, I leave you, my dearest Miss, faid she-I leave you, because I must !- But let me befeech you to do nothing rashly; nothing unbecomeing your character. If all be true that is faid, Mr.

Love-

or

ıd

y

1-

Ift

I

he

de

e)

th

of.

h,

to

mıld

u-

orif if

ion

hat

our

up

ive

y's

afe,

es.

ges

fled

e to

and

to:

lifs,

me

me-

Mr.

ove-

Lovelace cannot deferve you. If you can comply, remember it is your duty to comply. They take not, I own, the right method with fo generous a spirit. But remember, that there would not be any merit in your compliance, if it were not to be against your own liking. Remember also, what is expeted from a character so extraordinary as yours: Remember, it is in your power to unite or difunite your whole family for ever. Altho' it should at present be disagreeable to you to be thus compelled, your prudence, I dare fay, when you consider the matter seriously, will enable you to get over all prejudices against the one, and all prepossessions in favour of the other: And then the obligation you will lay all your family under, will be not only meritorious in you, with regard to them, but in a few months, very probably, highly fatisfactory, as well as reputable, to your felt.

Consider, my dear Mrs. Norton, said I, only consider, that it is not a small thing that is insisted upon; nor for a short duration: It is for my Life: Consider too, that all This is owing to an over-bearing Brother, who governs every body. Consider how desirous I am to oblige them, if a single Life, and breaking all correspondence with the man they hate because my Brother hates him, will do it.

I consider every thing, my dearest Miss: And, added to what I have said, do you only consider, that is, by pursuing your own will, and rejecting theirs, you should be unhappy, you will be deprived of all that consolation which those have, who have been directed by their Parents, altho' the event prove not answerable to their wishes.

I must go, repeated she:—Your Brother will say [and she wept] that I harden you by my whining nonsinfe. 'Tis indeed hard, that so much regard should be paid to the humours of one child; and so little to the inclination of another. But let me repeat, that it is your duty to acquiesce, if you can acquiesce: Your Vol. I.

L

of

[Y

noi

TI

po

wit

vid

hin

tha

ear.

the

tio

mu 1

cov

But

WOI

Mo

form

that

10W

her

pret

903

Father has given your Brother's schemes his sanction; and they are now his. Mr. Lovelace, I doubt, is not a man that will justify your choice so much as he will their dislike. It is easy to see that your Brother has a view in discrediting you with all your friends, with your Uncles in particular: But for that very reason, you should comply, if possible, in order to disconcert his ungenerous measures. I will pray for you; and that is all I can do for you. I must now go down, and make a report, that you are resolved never to have Mr. Solmes—Must I?—Consider, my dear Miss Clary—Must I?

Indeed you must!—But of This I do assure you, that I will do nothing to disgrace the part you have had in my education. I will bear every-thing that shall be short of forcing my hand into his who never can have any share in my heart. I will try by patient duty, by humility, to overcome them. But death will I chuse, in any shape, rather than That man.

I dread to go down, faid she, with so determined an answer: They will have no patience with me.—But let me leave you with one observation, which I beg of you always to bear in mind :-

'That persons of prudence, and distinguished talents, like yours, seem to be sprinkled through the world, to give credit, by their example, to Religion and Virtue. When such persons wilfully err, how great must be the fault! How ungrateful to that God, who bleffed them with fuch talents! What a Ios likewise to the world! What a wound to Virtue!—But this, I hope, will never be to be faid of Miss Clarissa Harlowe!'

I could give her no answer, but by my tears. And I thought, when she went away, the better half of my heart went with her.

I listened to hear what reception she would meet with below; and found it was just such a one as she had apprehended.

Will

I.

n; ot

vill

sa

ith

on, ert

ind

vn,

ave lis

ou,

ave

nall

can

ity,

II II

an

But

g of

ta-

the rion

WOE

that at a

Vir-

d of

And

my

neet

the

Will

Will she, or will she not, be Mrs. Solmes? None of your whining circumlocutions, Mrs. Norton!— [You may guess who said this] Will she, or will she not, comply with her Parents will?

This cut short all she was going to say.

If I must speak so briefly, Miss will sooner die, than Any-body but Lovelace! interrupted my Brother.

This Madam, This, Sir, is your meek Daughter!
This is Mrs. Norton's Sweet child!—Well, Goody, you may return to your own habitation. I am empowered to forbid you to have any correspondence with this perverse girl for a month to come, as you value the favour of our whole family, or of any individual of it.

And faying this, uncontradicted by any-body, he himself shewed her to the door—No doubt, with all that air of cruel insult, which the haughty Rich can put on to the unhappy Low, who have not pleased them.

So here, my dear Miss Howe, am I deprived of the advice of one of the most prudent and conscientious women in the world, were I to have ever so much occasion for it.

I might indeed write (as I presume, under your cover) and receive her answers to what I should write. But should such a correspondence be charged upon her, I know she would not be guilty of a falshood for the world; nor even of an equivocation: And should she own it after this prohibition, she would forfeit my Mother's favour for ever. And in my dangerous fever, some time ago, I engaged my Mother to promise me, that, if I died before I could do any-thing for the good woman, she would set her above want for the rest of her life, should her eyes fail her, or sickness befall her, and she could not provide for herself, as she now so prettily does by her fine needleworks.

What measures will they fall upon next?—Will N 2 they

b

vi

n

P

of

m fn

ha m:

ch

un

qu

S

no

fau

fay

His

eve

WO

dece

fore

pan

they not recede when they find that it must be a rooted antipathy, and nothing else, that could make a temper not naturally inflexible, so sturdy?

Adieu, my dear. Be you happy !—To know that it is in your power to be so, is all that seems wanting to make you fo.

CL. HARLOWE.

LETTER XL.

Miss CLARISSA HARLOWE, To Miss HowE.

[In continuation of the subject in Letter xxxviii].

I WILL now, the midnight (for I have no fleep in my eyes) refume the subject I was forced so abruptly to quit; and will obey yours, Miss Lloyd's, Miss Campion's, and Miss Biddulph's call, with as much temper as my divided thoughts will admit. The dead stilness of this solemn hour will I hope contribute to calm my disturbed mind.

In order to acquit myself of so heavy a charge as that of having referves to fo dear a friend, I will acknowledge (and I thought I had over and over) that it is owing to my particular fituation, if Mr. Lovelace appears to me in a tolerable light: And I take upon me to fay, that had they opposed to him a man of fense, of virtue, of generolity; one who enjoyed his fortune with credit; who had a tenderness in his nature for the calamities of others, which would have given a moral affurance, that he would have been still less wanting in grateful returns to an obliging spirit: -Had they opposed such a man as this to Mr. Lovelace, and been as earnest to have me married, as now they are, I do not know myfelf, if they would have had reason to tax me with that invincible obstinacy which they lay to my charge: And this whatever had been the figure of the man; fince the Heart is what we women should judge by in the choice we make, as the best fecurity for the party's good behaviour in every relation of life.

But, fituated as I am, thus persecuted and driven; I own to you, that I have now-and-then had a little more difficulty than I wished for, in passing by Mr. Lovelace's tolerable qualities, to keep up my dislike to him for his others.

You fay, I must have argued with myself in his fayour, and in his disfavour, on a supposition, that I might possibly be one day his. I own that I have: And thus called upon by my dearest friend, I will set before you both parts of the argument.

And first, what occurred to me in his favour.

At his introduction into our family, his negative virtues were infifted upon:-He was no gamester; no horse-racer; no fox hunter; no drinker: My poor Aunt Hervy had, in confidence, given us to apprehend much disagreeable evil (especially to a Wite of the least delicacy) from a wine lover: And common sense instructed us, that Sobriety in a man is no fmall point to be secured, when so many mischiefs happen daily from excess. I remember, that my Sister made the most of this favourable circumstance in his character while the had any hopes of him.

He was never thought to be a niggard: Not even ungenerous: Nor when his conduct came to be enquired into, an extravagant, a squanderer: His pride So far was it a laudable pride fecured him from that. Then he was ever ready to own his errors. He was no jester upon facred things: Poor Mr. Wyerley's fault; who feemed to think, that there was wit in faying bold things, which would shock a serious mind. His conversation with us was always unexceptionable; even chastely so; which, be his actions what they would, shewed him capable of being influenced by decent company; and that he might probably therefore be a led man, rather than a leader, in other company. And one late instance, so late as last Saturday evening,

N 3

acy

0-

s,

as

he

ite

as

IC-

nat

ve-

p-

of

his

na-

ave ftill

rit:

ove-

WOE

lave

had what

e, as the

W

e

th

P

V

ci

V

u

of

ed

ar

ap

gı

be

21

15

fa

W

Si

of

ra

I

tr

be ho

of

pr

fu

evening, has raised him not a little in my opinion, with regard to this point of good (and at the same time, of manly) behaviour.

As to the advantage of Birth, that is of his side, above any Man who has been found out for me. If we may judge by that expression of his, which you were pleased with at the time; 'That upon true quality, and hereditary distinction, if good sense were not wanting, honour sat as easy as his glove;'That, with as familiar an air, was his familiar expression; while none but the prosperous upstart, Mushroom'n into rank (another of his peculiars) was arrogantly proud of it.'—If, I say, we may judge of him by this, we shall conclude in his favour, that he knows what sort of behaviour is to be expected from persons of Birth, whether he act up to it or not. Conviction is half way to amendment.

His fortunes in possession are handsome; in expectation, splendid: So nothing need be said on that subject.

But it is impossible, say some, that he should make a tender or kind Husband. Those who are for imposing upon me such a man as Mr. Solmes, and by methods so violent, are not intitled to make this objection. But now, on this subject, let me tell you how I have argued with myself—For still you must remember, that I am upon the extenuating part of his character.

A great deal of the treatment a Wife may expect from him, will possibly depend upon herself. Perhaps she must practife as well as promise obedience, to a man so little used to controul; and must be careful to oblige. And what Husband expects not this?—The more perhaps if he had not reason to assure himself of the preferable love of his Wife before she became such. And how much easier and pleasanter to obey the man of her choice, if he should be even unreasonable sometimes, than one she would not have had, could she have avoided it? Then, I think, as the men were were the framers of the Matrimonial Office, and made obedience a part of the woman's vow, she ought not, even in policy, to shew him, that she can break thro' her part of the contract (however lightly she may think of the instance) lest he should take it into his head (himself is judge) to think as lightly of other points, which she may hold more important—But indeed no point so solemnly vowed can be slight.

Thus principled, and acting accordingly, what a wretch must that Husband be, who could treat such a Wise brutally!—Will Lovelace's Wife be the only person, to whom he will not pay the grateful debt of civility and good manners? He is allowed to be brave: Who ever know a brave man, if a man of sense, an universally base man? And how much the gentleness of our Sex, and the manner of our training up and education, make us need the protection of the Brave, and the countenance of the Generous, let the general approbation which we are all so naturally inclined to give to men of that character, testify.

At worst, will he confine me prisoner to my chamber? Will he deny me the visits of my dearest friend, and forbid me to correspond with her? Will he take from me the Mistresly management, which I had not faultily discharged? Will he set a servant over me, with licence to insult me? Will he, as he has not a Sister, permit his Cousins Montague, or would either of those Ladies accept of a permission, to insult and tyrannize over me?—It cannot be.—Why then, think I often, do you tempt me, O my cruel friends, to try the difference?

And then has the secret pleasure intrude itself, to be able to reclaim such a man to the paths of virtue and honour: To be a secondary means, if I were to be his, of saving him, and preventing the mischies so enterprising a creature might otherwise be guilty of, if he be such a one.

When I have thought of him in these lights (and N 4 that lf you ua-

. I.

on,

me

ere nat, on;

by ows

ons

ect. ake

by obyou nust

of

aps to a l to he f of me bey

ad,

rere

21

al

ag

er

21

in

m op

dr

po

by

VIC

co

to

w

file

an ne

len

evi

but

mo

oth

ver

gin

rea

tra

his fo f

prij

]

that as a man of sense he will sooner see his errors, than another) I own to you, that I have had some difficulty to avoid taking the path they so violently endeavour to make me shun: And all that command of my passions which has been attributed to me as my greatest praise, and, in so young a creature, as my distinction, has hardly been sufficient for me.

And let me add, that the favour of his relations (all but himself unexceptionable) has made a good deal of additional weight, thrown into the fame scale.

But now, in his disfavour. When I have reflected upon the prohibition of my parents; The giddy appearance, disgraceful to our Sex, that such a preference would have: That there is no manner of likelihood, enflamed by the Rencounter, and upheld by art and ambition on my Brother's fide, that ever the animofity will be got over: That I must therefore be at perpetual variance with all my own family: That I must go to him, and to his, as an obliged and half-fortuned person: That his aversion to them all is as strong as theirs to him: That his whole family are hated for his fake; they having ours in return: That he has a very immoral character as to women: That knowing this, it is a high degree of impurity to think of joining in wedlock with fuch a man: That he is young, unbroken, his paffions unsubdued: That he is violent in his temper, yet artful: I am afraid vindictive too: That fuch an Husband might unsettle me in all my own principles, and hazard my future hopes: That his own relations, two excellent Aunts, and an Uncle, from whom he has fuch large expectations, have no influence upon him: That what tolerable qualities he has, are founded more in pride than in virtue: That allowing, as he does, the excellency of Moral Precepts, and believing the doctrine of future Rewards and Punishments, he can live as if he despised the one, and defied the other: The probability that the taint ariting from fuch free principles, may go down in o

LET. 40.

an

lty

our

af-

teft

on,

all

of

led

ap-

nce

od,

ind

ity

pe-

uft

ned

as

his

ery

115,

in ın-

in

00:

my

his

le,

no

ies

ie:

ral

rds

ne,

int

1.0

he

the manners of posterity: That I knowing these things, and the importance of them, should be more inexcuseable than one who knows them not; fince an error against judgment is worse, infinitely worse, than an error in judgment :- Reflecting upon these things, I cannot help conjuring you, my dear, to pray with me, and to pray for me, that I may not be pushed upon such indiscreet measures, as will render me inexcusable to myself: For that is the test, after all. The world's opinion ought to be but a fecondary confideration.

I have faid in his praise, that he is extremely ready to own his errors: But I have sometimes made a great drawback upon this article, in his disfavour; having been ready to apprehend, that this ingenuousness may possibly be attributable to two causes, neither of them, by any means, creditable to him. The one, that his vices are so much his masters, that he attempts not to conquer them; the other, that he may think it policy, to give up one half of his character, to fave the other, when the whole may be blameable: By this means, filencing by acknowledgement the objections he cannot answer; which may give him the praise of ingenuousness, when he can obtain no other; and when the challenged proof might bring out, upon discussion, other evils. These, you will allow, are severe constructions; but every thing his enemies fay of him cannot be falle: I will proceed by-and-by.

O O LANGUO STORE SHI Somerimes we have both thought him one of the most undesigning merely witty man we ever knew; at other times one of the deepelt creatures we ever conversed with. So that when in one visit we have imagined we fathomed him, in the next he has made us ready to give him up as impenetrable. This impenetrableness, my dear, is to be put among the shades in his character.—Yet, upon the whole, you have been fo far of his party, that you have contested, that his principal fault is over-frankness, and two much regard-

N 5 1 Low I Land lefneis

1

1

4

defness of appearances, and that he is too giddy to be very artful: You would have it, that at the time he says any thing good, he means what he speaks; That his variableness and levity are constitutional, owing to sound health, and to a soul and body [that was your observation] fitted for and pleased with each other. And hence you concluded, that could this consentaneousness [as you call it] of corporal and animal faculties be pointed by discretion; that is to say, could his vivacity be confined within the pale of but moral obligations; he would be far from being rejectible as a companion for life.

But I used then to say, and I still am of opinion, that he wants a heart: And if he hoes, he wants everything. A wrong head may be convinced, may have a right turn given it: But who is able to give a heart, if a heart be wanting? Divine Grace, working a miracle, or next to a miracle, can only change a bad heart. Should not one sly the man who is but suspected of such a one? What, O what, do Parents do, when they endeavour to force a child's inclination, but make her think better than otherwise she would think of a man obnoxious to themselves, and perhaps whose character will not stand examination?

I have faid, that I think Mr. Lovelace a vindictive man: Upon my Word, I have sometimes doubted, whether his perseverance in his addresses to me has not been the more obstinate, since he has sound himself so disagreeable to my friends. From that time I verily think he has been the more servent in them; yet courts them not, but sets them at desiance. For this indeed he pleads disinterestedness [I am sure he cannot politeness]; and the more plausibly, as he is apprised of the ability they have to make it worth his while to court them. 'Tis true he has declared, and with too much reason, (or there would be no bearing him) that the lowest submissions on his part would not be accepted; and to oblige me, has offered to seek a reconciliation with them, if I would give him hope of success.

L. I.

to be

lays

t his

ig to your

ther.

nta-

I fa-

ould

oral

e as

ion,

ery-

have

eart,

mi-

bad

ected

hen

nake

of a

hose

tive

ted,

not

ifelf

rily

urts

leed

ite-

the

ourt

uch

the

ed;

tion As As to his behaviour at church, the Sunday before last, I lay no stress upon that, because I doubt there was too much outward pride in his intentional humility, or Shorey, who is not his enemy, could not have mistaken it.

I do not think him so deeply learned in human Nature, or in Ethics, as some have thought him. Don't you remember how he stared at the following trite observations, which every moralist could have surnished him with? Complaining as he did, in a half-menacing strain, of the obloques raised against him— that if he were innocent, he should despise the obloquy: If not, revenge would not wipe off his guilt.' That no-body ever thought of turning a sword into a sponge!' That it was in his own power by reformation of an error laid to his charge by an enemy, to make that enemy one of his best friends; and (which was the noblest revenge in the world) against his will; since an enemy would not wish him to be without the faults he taxed him with.'

But the intention, he said, was the wound.

How so, I asked him, when That cannot wound without the application? 'That the adversary only held the sword: He himself pointed it to his breast: —And why should he mortally resent that malice, which he might be the better for as long as he lived? —What could be the reading he has been said to be master of, to wonder, as he did, at these observations?

But, indeed, he must take pleasure in Revenge; and yet holds others to be inexcuseable for the same fault. He is not, however, the only one who can see how truly blameable those errors are in another, which they hardly think such in themselves.

From these considerations; from these over-balances; it was, that I said, in a former, that I would not be in Love with this man for the world: And it was going further than prudence would warrant, when

N 6

I was

I was for compounding with you, by the words conditional liking; which you so humorously rally.

Well but, methinks you fay, what is all this to the purpose? This is still but reasoning: But if you are in Love, you are: And Love, like the vapours, is the deeper rooted for having no sufficient cause assignable for its hold. And so you call upon me again, to have no referves, and fo-forth.

Why then, my dear, if you will have it, I think, that, with all his preponderating faults, I like him better than I ever thought I should like him; and, those faults considered, better perhaps than I ought to like him. And I believe, it is possible for the persecution I labour under, to induce me to like him still more—Especially while I can recollect to his advantage our last interview, and as every day produces stronger instances of tyranny, I will call it, on the other side.—In a word, I will frankly own (since you cannot think any-thing I say too explicit) that were he now but a moral man, I would prefer him to all the men I ever saw.

So that this is but conditional liking still, you'll say.

Nor, I hope, is it more. I never was in Love as it is called; and whether This be it, or not, I must submit to you. But will venture to think it, if it be, no such mighty monarch, no such unconquerable power, as I have heard it represented; and it must have met with greater encouragement than I think I have given it, to be absolutely unconquerable—Since I am persua ed, that I could yet, without a throb, most willingly give up the one man to get rid of the other.

But now to be a little more serious with you: If, my dear, my particularly unhappy situation had driven (or led me, if you please) into a Liking of the man; and if that Liking had, in your opinion, inclined me to love him; should you, whose mind is susceptible of the most friendly impressions; who have such high notions of the delicacy which ought to be observed by our Sex in these matters; and who actually do enter fo deeply into the diffrestes of one you love-should you have pushed so far that unhappy friend on so very nice a fubject? - Especially, when I aimed not (as you could prove by fifty instances, it seems) to guard against being found out. Had you rallied me by word of mouth in the manner you do, it might have been more in character; especially, if your friend's distresses had been furmounted; and if the had affected Prudish airs in revolving the subject : But to sit down to write it, as methinks I see you, with a gladdened eye, and with all the archness of exultation-indeed, my dear (and I take notice of it, rather for the fake of your own generofity, than for my fake; for, as I have faid, I love your raillery) it is not so very pretty; the delicacy of the subject, and the delicacy of your own mind, confidered.

I lay down my pen here, that you may confider of it a little, if you please.

I.

di-

he

are

he ole

ve

k, im id,

to

unces

er

n-

he

he

y.

it b-

no

er,

et

en

r-

11-

If,

en

n;

ne

le

gh

by

ur

I RESUME, to give you my opinion of the force which figure or person ought to have upon our Sex: And this I shall do both generally as to the other Sex, and particularly as to this man: Whence you will be able to collect how far my friends are in the right, or in the wrong, when they attribute a good deal of prejudice in favour of one man, and in disfavour of the other, on the score of figure. But, first, let me observe, That they see abundant reason, on comparing Mr. Lovelace and Mr. Solmes together, to believe that this may be a consideration with me; and therefore they believe it is.

There is certainly something very plausible and attractive, as well as creditable to a woman's choice, in figure. It gives a savourable impression at first sight, in which we wish to be confirmed: And if, upon surther acquaintance, we find reason so to be, we are pleased with our judgment, and like the person the better.

better, for having given us cause to compliment our own sagacity, in our first-sighted impressions. But, nevertheless, it has been generally a rule with me, to suspect a fine sigure, both in man and woman; and I have had a good deal of reason to approve my rule; —With regard to Men especially; who ought to value themselves rather upon their intellectual than personal qualities. For, as to our Sex, if a fine woman should be led by the opinion of the world, to be vain and conceited upon her form and features; and that to such a degree, as to have neglected the more material and more durable recommendations; the world will be ready to excuse her; since a pretty sool, in all she says, and in all she does, will please, we know not why.

But who would grudge this pretty fool her short day! Since, with her summer's sun, when her butterfly flutters are over, and the winter of age and sorrows arrives, she will feel the just effects of having neglected to cultivate her better faculties: For then, like another Helen, she will be unable to bear the reflexion even of her own glass; and being sunk into the insignificance of a mere old woman, she will be entitled to the contempts which follow that character. While the discreet matron, who carries up [we will not, in such a one's case, say down] into advanced life, the ever-amiable character of virtuous prudence, and useful experience, finds solid veneration take place of airy admiration, and more than supply the want of it.

But for a man to be vain of his person, how effeminate! If such a one happens to have genius, it seldom strikes deep into intellectual subjects. His outside usually runs away with him. To adorn, and perhaps, intending to adorn, to render ridiculous, that person, takes up all his attention. All he does is personal; that is to say, for himself: All he admires, is himself: And in spite of the correction of the Stage, which is so often and so justly exposes a coxcomb, he usually usually dwindles down, and finks into that character; and, of consequence, becomes the scorn of one Sex, and the jest of the other.

I.

ur

it,

to

nd

e;

ue

al

ld

n-

a

be

a-

s,

rt

r

r-

g

n,

-

e

d

le

t, d

e,

e ıt

-

t-

-

it

19

5,

This is generally the case of your fine figures of Men, and of those who value themselves on dress and outward appearance: Whence it is, that I repeat, that mere person in a man, it a despicable consideration. But if a man, besides figure, has learning, and fuch talents, as would have distinguished him, whatever were his form; then indeed person is an addition: And if he has not run too egregiously into selfadmiration, and if he has preferved his morals, he is truly a valuable being.

Mr. Lovelace has certainly tafte; and, as far as I am able to determine, he has judgment in most of the politer arts. But altho' he has a humorous way of carrying it off, yet one may fee, that he values himfelf not a little, both on his person and his parts, and even upon his dress; and yet he has so happy an ease in the latter that it feems to be the least part of his study. And as to the former, I should hold myself inexcufeable, if I were to add to his vanity by shewing the least regard for what is too evidently so much his.

And now, my dear, let me alk you; Have I come up to your expectations? If I have not, when my mind is more at ease, I will endeavour to please you For, methinks, my fentences drag; my style creeps; my imagination is funk; my spirits save me not; only to tell you, That whether I have more or less, I am wholly devoted to the commands of my dear

Miss Howe.

P. S. The insolent Betty Barnes has just now fired me anew, by reporting to me the following expressions of the hideous creature Solmes- That he is fure of the coy girl; and that with little labour to himself." That be I ever so averse to him beforehand, he can depend upon my principles; and it will be a pleasure to him to fee by what pretty degrees I shall come to.'

T

d je

ti

a

b

[-Horrid wretch!] 'That it was Sir Oliver's observation, who knew the world perfectly well, that · Fear was a better fecurity than Love, for a woman's good behaviour to her Husband; altho', for his part, to such a fine ereature [truly] he would try what Love would do; for a few weeks at leaft:

Being unwilling to believe what the old Knight used to aver, That fondness spoils more wives than it makes good.

What think you, my dear, of such a wretch as this! tutored, too, by that old surly Misogynist, as he was deemed, Sir Oliver?—

LETTER XLI.

Miss CLARISSA HARLOWE, To Miss Howe.
Tuesday, March 21.

HOW wilfingly would my dear Mother shew kindness to me, were she permitted! None of this persecution should I labour under, I am sure, if that regard were paid to her prudence and fine understanding, which they so well deserve. Whether owing to her, or to my Aunt, or to both, that a new trial was to be made upon me, I cannot tell; but this morning her Shorey delivered into my hand the following condescending Letter.

My dear girl,

FOR fo I must still call you; since dear you may be to me, in every sense of the word—We have taken into particular consideration, some hints that sell yesterday from your good Norton, as if we had not, at Mr. Solmes's first application, treated you with that condescension, wherewith we have in all other instances treated you. If it even had been so, my dear, you were not excuseable to be wanting in your part, and to set yourself to oppose your Father's will in a point into which he had entered too sar, to recede with

I.

at

-

r

d

d

t

8

e

with honour. But all yet may be well. On your fingle will, my child, depends all our happiness.

Your Father permits me to tell you, that if you now at last comply with his expectations, all past disobligations shall be buried in oblivion, as if they had never been: But withal, that this is the last time that that grace will be offered you.

I hinted to you, you must remember (a), that patterns of the richest silks were sent for. They are come. And as they are come, your Father, to shew how much he is determined, will have me send them up to you. I could have wished they might not have accompanied this Letter—But there is no great matter in that. I must tell you, that your delicacy is not to be quite so much regarded, as I had once thought it deserved to be.

These are the newest, as well as richest, that we could procure; answerable to our station in the world; answerable to the fortune, additional to your Grand-stater's Estate, designed you; and to the noble Settlements agreed upon.

Your Father intends you fix Suits (three of them dressed Suits) at his own expense. You have an intire new Suit; and one besides, which I think you never wore but twice. As the new Suit is rich, if you chuse to make That one of the fix, your Father will present you with an hundred guineas in lieu.

Mr. Solmes intends to present you with a set of jewels. As you have your Grandmother's and your own, if you chuse to have the former new set, and to make them serve, his present will be made in money; a very round sum—which will be given in sull property to yourself; besides a fine annual allowance for pin-money, as it is called. So that your objection against the spirit of a man you think worse of than it deserves, will have no weight; but you will be more independent than a Wife of less discretion

I

d iı

0

1

know full well, that I, who first and last brought a still larger fortune into the family than you will carry to Mr. Solmes, had not a provision made me of near This that we have made for you.—Where people marry to their liking, terms are the least things stood upon—Yet should I be forry if you cannot (to oblige us all) overcome a dislike.

Wonder not, Clary, that I write to you thus plainly and freely upon this subject. Your behaviour hitherto has been such, that we have had no opportunity of entering minutely into the subject with you. Yet, after all that has passed between you and me in conversation, and between you and your Uncles by Letter, you have no room to doubt what is to be the consequence.—Either, child, we must give up our authority, or you your humour. You cannot expect the one. We have all the reason in the world to expect the other. You know I have told you more than once, that you must resolve to have Mr. Solmes, or never to be looked upon as our child.

The draught of the Settlements you may see whenever you will. We think there can be no room for objection to any of the articles. There is still more in them in our family's favour, than was stipulated at first, when your Aunt talked of them to you. More so, indeed, than we could have asked. If, upon perusal of them, you think any alteration necessary, it shall be made.—Do, my dear girl, send to me within this day or two, or rather ask me, for the perusal of them.

As a certain person's appearance at church so lately, and what he gives out every-where, make us extremely uneasy, and as that uneasiness will continue while you are single, you must not wonder that a short day is intended. This-day-fortnight we design it to be, if you have no objection to make that I shall approve of. But if you determine as we would have you, and signify it to us, we shall not stand with you for a week or so.

Your fightliness of person may perhaps make some think this alliance disparaging. But I hope you will not put such a personal value upon yourself: if you do, it will indeed be the less wonder that person should weigh with you (however weak the consideration!) in another man.

Thus we Parents, in justice, ought to judge: That our two Daughters are equally dear and valuable to us: If so, why should Clarista think that a disparagement, which Arabella would not (nor we for her) have thought any, had the address been made to her?—You will know what I mean by this, without my explaining myself farther.

ou

ta

rry

ear

ple

boo

ge

ly

rto

of

et,

n-

er,

n-

0-

he

ct

an

or

1-

or

re

at

re

al

e

y

,

(-

e rt

0 11

e

u

11

Signify to us, now, therefore, your compliance with our wishes. And then there is an end of your confinement. An act of oblivion, as I may call it, shall pass upon all your former refractoriness: And you will once more make us happy in you, and in one another. You may, in this case, directly come down to your Father and me, in his Study; where we will give you our opinions of the patterns, with our hearty forgiveness and bleffings.

Come, be a good child, as you used to be, my Clariffa. I have (notwithstanding your past behaviour, and the hopelefness which some have expressed in your compliance) undertaken this one time more for you. Diferedit not my hopes, my dear girl. I have promiled never more to interfere between your Father and you, if this my most earnest application succeed not. I expect you down, Love. Your Father expects you down. But be sure don't let him see anything unchearful in your compliance. If you come, I will clasp you to my fond heart, with as much pleafure as ever I pressed you to it in my whole life. You don't know what I have suffered within these few weeks past; nor ever will be able to guess, till you come to be in my fituation; which is that of a fond and indulgent Mother, praying night and day, and flruggling to preserve, against the attempts of more ungovernable spirits, the peace and union of her family.

But you know the terms. Come not near us, if you resolve to be undutiful: But this, after what I have written, I hope you cannot be.

If you come directly, and, as I said, chearfully, as if your heart were in your duty (and you told me it was free, you know) I shall then, as I said, give you the most tender proofs, how much I am

Your truly affectionate Mother.

LE

WI

1;

th

WI

up

in

at

he

CC

th

th

al

tu

U

C

f

fi

Think for me, my dearest friend, how I must be affected by this Letter; the contents of it is so surprisingly terrifying, yet so sweetly urged!—O why, cried I to myself, am I obliged to undergo this severe conflict between a command that I cannot obey, and language so condescendingly moving!—Could I have been sure of being struck dead at the altar before the ceremony had given the man I hate a title to my vows, I think I could have submitted to have been led to it. But to think of living with and living for a man one abhors, what a sad thing is that!

And then, how could the glare of habit and ornament be supposed any inducement to one, who has always held, that the principal view of a good Wise in the adorning of her person, ought to be, to preserve the affection of her husband, and to do credit to his choice; and that she should be even fearful of attracting the eyes of others?—In this view, must not the very richness of the patterns add to my disgusts?—Great encouragement indeed, to think of adorning one's felf to be the Wife of Mr. Solmes!

Upon the whole, it was not possible for me to go down upon the prescribed condition. Do you think it was?—And to write, if my Letter would have been read, what could I write that would be admitted, and after what I had written and said to so little effect?

I walked

I walked backward and forward. I threw down with disdain the patterns. Now to my closet retired I; then quitting it, threw myself upon the Settee; then upon this chair; then upon that; then into one window, then into another—I knew not what to do!—And while I was in this suspense, having again taken up the Letter to re-peruse it, Betty came in, reminding me, by order, That my Papa and Mamma waited for me in my father's study.

Tell my Mamma, faid I, that I beg the favour of feeing her here for one moment; or to permit me to attend her any-where by herfelf.

. I.

Ore

fa-

, if

it I

as e it

you

r.

be ri-

ied

n-

an-

the

my

ra

12-ife

rve

his

Ahe

ng

go

nk

en

nd

ed.

I listened at the stairs-head—You see, my dear, how it is, cried my Father, very angrily: All your condescension (as your indulgence heretosore) is thrown away. You blame your Son's violence, as you call it [I had some pleasure in hearing this]; but nothing else will do with her. You shall not see her alone. Is my presence an exception to the bold creature?

Tell her, faid my Mother to Betty, she knows upon what terms she may come down to us. Nor will I fee her upon any other.

The maid brought me this Answer. I had recourse to my pen and ink; but I trembled so, that I could not write, nor knew I what to say, had I had steadier singers. At last Betty brought me these lines from my Father.

Undutiful and perverse Clarissa,

Nother shall not see, will move you. Your Mother shall not see you; nor will I. Prepare however to obey. You know our pleasure. Your Uncle Antony, your Brother, and your Sister, and your favourite Mrs. Norton, shall see the ceremony performed privately at your Uncle's chapel. And when Mr. Solmes can introduce you to us, in the temper we wish to behold you in, we may perhaps forgive

I

ii

fo

yo L

th

N

hi

tra

th

no

wi

f forgive his Wife, altho' we never can, in any other character, our perverse Daughter. As it will be so privately performed, cloaths and equipage may be provided afterwards. So prepare to go to your Uncle's for an early day in next week. We will not see you till all is over: And we will have it over the sooner, in order to shorten the time of your deserved confinement, and our own trouble in contending with such a rebel, as you have been of late. I will hear no pleas, I will receive no Letter, nor Expostulation. Nor shall you hear from me any more till you have changed your name to my liking. This from

Your incensed Father.

If this resolution be adhered to, then will my Father never see me more!—For I will never be the Wife of that Solmes—I will die first!—

Tuesday Evening.

HE, this Solmes, came hither foon after I had received my Father's Letter. He fent up to beg leave to wait upon me—I wonder at his affurance!—

I faid to Betty, who brought me this message, Let him restore an unhappy creature to her Father and Mother, and then I may hear what he has to say. But, if my friends will not see me on his account, I will not see him upon his own.

I hope, Miss, said Betty, you will not fend me down with this Answer. He is with your Papa and Mamma.

I am driven to despair, said I. I cannot be used worse. I will not see him.

Down the went with my Answer. She pretended, it seems, to be loth to repeat it: So was commanded out of her affected reserves, and gave it in its full force.

O how I heard my Father storm !

They were all together, it seems, in his Study. My Brother was for having me turned out of the house that that moment, to Lovelace, and my evil destiny. My Mother was pleased to put in a gentle word for me: I know not what it was: But thus she was answered—My dear, this is the most provoking thing in the world in a woman of your good sense!—To love a rebel, as well as if she were dutiful. What encouragement for duty is this?—Have I not loved her as well as ever you did? And why am I changed! Would to the Lord, your Sex knew how to distinguish! It is plain, that she relies upon her power over you. The fond Mother ever made a hardened child!

She was pleased, however, to blame Betty, as the wench owned, for giving my Answer its full force.

But my Father praised her for it.

The wench fays, That he would have come up in his wrath, at my refusing to see Mr. Solmes, had not my Brother and Sister prevailed upon him to the contrary.

I wish he had !—And, were it not for his own sake, that he had killed me!

u

-

a

d

e

eve

et

be

it,

ill

ne

nd

ed

ed,

ut

2.

ly.

ule

hat

Mr. Solmes condescended [I am mightily obliged to him, truly !] to plead for me.

They are all in tumults! How it will end, I know not—I am quite weary of my life—So happy, till within these few weeks!—So miserable now!

Well, indeed, might my Mother fay, That I should have severe trials (a).

P. S. The Idiot [fuch a one am I treated like!] is begged, as I may fay, by my Brother and Sifter. They have defired, that I may be configned over entirely to their management. If it be granted [It is granted, on my Father's part, I understand, but not yet on my Mother's] what cruelty may I not expect from their envy, jealousy, and ill will!—I shall soon see, by its effects, if I am to be so configned—This is a written intimation privately dropt in my Woodhouse-walk, by my Cousin Dolly Hervey. The dear girl longs to see me, she tells me: But is forbidden till she see me as Mrs. Solmes, or as consenting to be his. I will take example by their perseverance!—Indeed I will!—

LETTER XLII.

Miss CLARISSA HARLOWE, To Miss Howe.

A N angry dialogue, a scolding-bout rather, has passed between my Sister and me. Did you think

I could scold, my dear?

She was fent up to me, upon my refusal to see Mr. Solmes—Let loose upon me, I think!—No intention on their parts, to conciliate! It seems evident that I am given up to my Brother and her, by general consent.

I will do justice to every-thing she said against me, which carried any force with it. As I ask for your approbation or disapprobation of my conduct, upon the facts I lay before you, I should think it the sign of a very bad cause, if I endeavoured to mislead my judge.

She began with representing to me the danger I had been in, had my Father come up, as he would have done had he not been hindered-by Mr. Solmes, among the reft. She reflected upon my Norton, as if the encouraged me in my perverseness. She ridiculed me for my supposed effeem for Mr. Lovelace.-Was furprised that the witty, the prudent, nay, the dutiful and pi-ous [ so she sneeringly pronounced the word | Clariffa Harlowe, should be so strangely fond of a profligate man, that her parents were forced to lock her up, in order to hinder her from running into Let me ask you, my dear, said she, how you now keep your account of the disposition of your time? How many hours in the twenty-four do · you devote to your Needle? How many to your · Prayers? Fair any a war Lor

LE

c r

6 1

6 F

6 m

in t hav exu attr hou

me Mo faid pect pion with was, up: and to yi Tha a nat light merit migh Hu/b

the fi

Prayers? How many to Letter-writing? And how many to Love?—I doubt, I doubt, my little dear, was her arch expression. The latter article is like

' Aaron's rod, and swallows up all the rest!-Tell me; is it not fo?"

To these I answered, That it was a double mortification to me to owe my safety from the effects of my Father's indignation to a man I could never thank for any thing. I vindicated the good Mrs. Norton with a warmth that was due to her merit.—With equal warmth I resented her reslections upon me on Mr. Lovelace's account. As to the disposition of my time in the twenty-four hours, I told her it would better have become her to pitty a Sister in distress, than to exult over her—Especially, when I could too justly attribute to the disposition of some of her wakeful hours no small part of that distress.

She raved extremely at this last hint: But reminded me of the gentle treatment of all my friends, my Mother's in particular, before it came to This: She said, that I had discovered a spirit they never had expected: That, if they had thought me such a championess, they would hardly have ventured to engage with me: But that now, the short and the long was, that the matter had gone too far to be given up: That it was become a contention between duty and wilfulness; Whether a Parent's authority were to yield to a Daughter's obstinacy, or the contrary: That I must therefore bend or break, that was all, child.

S

e

e

d

0

0

V

of 0

11

I told her, that I wished the subject were of such a nature, that I could return her pleasantry with equal lightness of heart: But that, if Mr. Solmes had such merit in every-body's eyes, in hers particularly, why might he not be a Brother to me, rather than a Husband?

O child, fays she, methinks you are as pleasant to the full as I am: I begin to have some hopes of you Vol. I.

LE

Wi

the

let

rea

len

tem

eve

par

my/e

my

But

me,

me,

have any-

my i

pose

to b bumb

caut

able

knov

been

body,

And

My f

verie

With

Upon

nor a

comm

Th

Sh

l r

I

I

now. But do you think I will rob my Sifter of her humble servant? Had he first addressed himself to me, proceeded fhe, fomething might have been faid : But to take my younger Sifter's refusal! No, no, child; it is not come to that neither ! Besides, That would be to leave the door open in your heart for you know who, child; and we would fain bar him out, if poffible. In fhort [and then the changed both her tone, and her looks] had I been as forward as somebody, to throw myself into the arms of one of the greatest profligates in England, who had endeavoured to support his claim to me thro' the blood of my Brother, then might all my family join together to fave me from fuch a wretch, and to marry me as fast as they could, to some worthy man, who might opportunely offer himself. And now, Clary, all's out, and make the most of it.

Did not this deserve a severe return? Do, say it did, to justify my reply.—Alas! for my poor Sister! said I—The man was not always so great a profligate. How true is the observation, That unrequited Lave turns to deepeft Hate!

I thought she would have beat me. But I proceeded—I have heard often of my Brother's danger, and my Brother's murderer. When so little ceremony is made with me, why should I not speak out?—Did he not seek to kill the other, if he could have done it? Would my Brother have given Lovelace his life, had it been in his power?—The aggressor should not complain.—And, as to opportune offers, would to Heaven some one had offered opportunely to somebody! It is not my fault, Bella, the opportune gentleman don't come!

Could you, my dear, have shewn more spirit? I expected to feel the weight of her hand. She did come up to me, with it held up: Then, speechless with passion, ran down half way of the stairs, and came up again.

When

When the could speak-God give me patience with you!

ľ

t

d

W

1-

e,

ft

0-

r,

m

d, er

he

it

r!

te.

ave.

10-

er,

ere-

ut?

ave

bis

bluc

d to dy!

man

1 1

did

hless

and

V hen

Amen, said I: But you see, Bella, how ill you bear the retort you provoke. Will you forgive me; and let me find a Sister in you, as I am forry, if you have reason to think me unsisterly in what I have said?

Then did she pour upon me, with greater violence; considering my gentleness as a triumph of temper over her. She was resolved, she said, to let every-body know how I took the wicked Lovelace's part against my Brother.

I wished, I told her, I could make the plea for myself, which she might for herself; to wit, That my anger was more inexcuseable than my judgment. But I presumed she had some other view in coming to me, than she had hitherto acquainted me with. Let me, said I, but know (after all that has passed) if you have any-thing to propose that I can comply with; any-thing that can make my only Sister once more my friend?

I had before, upon her ridiculing me on my supposed character of meekness, said, that, altho' I wished to be thought meek, I would not be abject; altho' bumble, not mean: And here, in a sneering way, she cautioned me on that head.

I replied, that her pleasantry was much more agreeable than her anger. But I wished she would let me know the end of a visit that had hitherto (between us) been so unsisterly.

She defired to be informed in the name of everybody, was her word, what I was determined upon? And whether to comply or not?—One word for all: My friends were not to have patience with so perverie a creature for ever.

This then I told her I would do: Absolutely break with the man they were all so determined against: Upon condition, however, that neither Mr. Solmes, nor any other, were urged to me with the force of a command.

O 2

And

292 :

t

1

I

I

1

t

C

P

ti

. 42

n

di

I

N

m

b:

li

W

god

E

th

And what was this, more than I had offered before? What, but ringing my changes upon the same bells, and neither receding nor advancing one tittle?

If I knew what other proposals I could make, I told her, that would be acceptable to them all, and free me from the address of a man so disagreeable to me, I would make them. I had indeed before offered. never to marry without my Father's confent-

She interrupted me, That was because I depended upon my whining tricks to bring my Father and Mother to what I pleased.

A poor dependence! I faid :- She knew those who would make that dependence vain-

And I should have brought them to my own beck, very probably, and my Uncle Harlowe too, as also my Aunt Hervey, had I not been forbidden their fight, and thereby hindered from playing my pug's tricks before them.

At least, Bella, faid I, you have hinted to me to whom I am obliged, that my Father and Mother, and every-body elfe, treat him thus harfaly. But furely you make them all very weak. Indifferent persons, judging of us two from what you say, would either think me a very artful creature, or you a very spiteful one-

You are indeed a very artful one, for that matter, interrupted she in a passion: One of the artfullest I ever knew! And then followed an accusation so low! fo unfifterly !- That I half-bewitched people by my infinuating address: That no-body could be valued or respected, but must stand like cyphers where-ever l came. . How often, said she, have I and my Brother been talking upon a subject, and had every body's attention, till you came in, with your bewitching meek pride, and humble fignificance? And then have we either been stopped by references to Miss Clary's opinion, forfooth; or been forced to stop ourselves, or must have talked on unattended to by every-body. She

I.

-

e

?

1

d

0

d,

bs

3-10

k,

fo

ir

to

nd

ely

15, ner

ful

er,

H

w!

my

10 rl

her

ly's

ieek

we pi-

10

She

DINOW

She paused. Dear Bella, proceed! She indeed feemed only gathering breath.

And fo I will, faid she-Did you not bewitch my Grandfather? Could any thing be pleasing to him, that you did not fay or do? How did he use to hang, till he slabbered again, poor doting old man! on your filver tongue! Yet what did you fay, that we could not have faid? What did you do, that we did not endeavour to do?—And what was all this for? Why, truly, his Last Will shewed what effect your smooth obligingness had upon him !- To leave the acquired part of his Estate from the next heirs, his own Sons, to a grandchild; to his youngest grandchild! a Daughter too !- To leave the family pictures from his Sons to you, because you could tiddle about them, and, tho' you now neglect their examples, could wipe and clean them with your dainty hands! The familyplate too, in fuch quantities, of two or three generations standing, must not be changed, because his precious child (a), humouring his old fal-lal tafte, admired it, to make it all her own.

This was too low to move me: O my poor Sifter! faid I: Not to be able, or at least willing, to distinguish between Art and Nature! If I did oblige, I was happy in it: I looked for no further reward: My mind is above art, from the dirty motives you mention. I wish with all my heart my Grandfather had not thus distinguished me: He saw my Brother likely to be amply provided for out of the family, as well as in it: He defired that you might have the greater share of my Father's favour for it; and no doubt but you both will. You know, Bella, that the Estate my Grandfather bequeathed me was not half the real Estate he left.

What's all that to an Estate in possession, and left (a) Alluding to his words in the preamble to the clauses in his Will. See p. 29. O 3 of end ban nov soul you with such distinctions, as gave you a reputation of greater value than the Estate itself?

C

A

Hence my missortune, Bella, in your Envy, I doubt!—But have I not given up that possession in the best manner I could-

Yes, interrupting me, she hated me for that best manner. Specious little witch! she called me: Your best manner, so sull of art and design, had never been seen thro', if you, with your blandishing ways, had not been put out of sight, and reduced to positive declarations!—Hindered from playing your little, whining tricks; curling, like a serpent, about your Mamma; and making her cry to deny you any-thing your little obstinate heart was set upon!—

Obstinate heart, Bella!

Yes, obstinate heart! For did you ever give up any-thing? Had you not the Art to make them think all was right you asked, tho' my Brother and I were frequently refused favours of no greater import?

I know not, Bella, that I ever asked any-thing unfit to be granted. I seldom asked favours for myself, but for others.

I was a reflecting creature for this.

All you speak of, Bella, was a long time ago. I cannot go so far back into our childish sollies. Little did I think of how long flanding this your late-shewn antipathy is.

I was a reflecter again! Such a faucy meekness; fuch a best manner; and fuch venom in words!—O Clary!

Clary! Thou wert always a two-faced girl!

Nobody thought I had two faces, when I gave up All into my Father's management; taking from his bounty, as before, all my little pocket-money, without a failling addition to my stipend, or defiring it—

Yes, cunning creature!—And that was another of your fetches!—For did it not engage my fond Father has no noubt you thought it would) to tell you, that, fince you had done so grateful and dutiful a thing, he would would keep entire, for your use, all the produce of the Estate left you, and be but your Steward in it; and that you should be entitled to the same allowances as before? Another of your book-in's Clary!—So that all your extravagancies have been supported gratis.

My extravagancies, Bella !- But did my Father ever give me any-thing he did not give you?

Yes, indeed; I got more by that means, than I should have had the conscience to ask. But I have still the greater part to shew! But you! What have you to shew!—I dare say, not fifty pieces in the world!

Indeed I have not !

. I.

tion

, I

in

best

our

had

tive

tle,

our

up

nk

ere

11-

4,

I

tle

wn

ch

y!

up

h-

of

er

t,

e

d

I believe you !- Your Mamma Norton, I suppose

-But mum for that !-

Unworthy Bella!—The good woman, altho' low in circumstance, is great in mind! Much greater than those who would impute meanness to a foul incapable of it.

What then have you done with the fums given you from infancy to fquander?—Let me afk you [affecting archness] Has, has, has Lovelace, has your Rake, put it out at interest for you?

O that my Sifter would not make me blush for her! It is, however, out at interest!—And I hope it will bring me interest upon interest!—Better than to lie useless in my cabinet.

She understood me, she said. Were I a man, she should suppose I was aiming to carry the County—Popularity! A crowd to follow me with their blessings as I went to and from church, and nobody else to be regarded, were agreeable things. House-top-proclamations! I bid not my light under a bushel, she would say that for me. But was it not a little hard upon me, to be kept from blazing on a Sunday!—And to be hindered from my charitable oftentations?

This, indeed, Bella, is cruel in you, who have fo largely

.I

- 2

T

1

n

·a 11

r

fe

a

fe

2

W

.tl

b

CI

F

bi

25

to

te

You'll be out of breath by-and by. I cannot wish to be able to return this usage.—Poor Bella! and I believe I smiled a little too contemptuously for a Sister to a Sister.

None of your faucy contempts [rifing in her voice]: None of your poor Bella's, with that air of superiority in a younger Sifter!

Well then, rich Bella! courtesying—that will please you better—And it is due likewise to the hoards you boast of.

Look-ye, Clary, holding up her hand, if you are not a little more abject in your meekness, a little more mean in your humility, and treat me with the respect due to an elder Sister—you shall find—

Not that you will treat me worse than you have done, Bella!—That cannot be; unless you were to let sall your uplifted hand upon me—And that would less become you to do, than me to bear.

Good, meek creature:—But you were upon your overtures just now!—I shall surprise every-body by tarrying so long. They will think some good may be done with you.—And supper will be ready.

A tear would stray down my cheek—How happy have I been, said I, sighing, in the supper-time conversations, with all my dear friends in my eye round their hospitable board!

ployers

I met only with insult for this—Bella has not a feeling heart. The highest joy in this life she is not capable of: But then she saves herself many griefs, by her impenetrableness—Yet, for ten times the pain that such a sensibility is attended with, would I not part with the pleasure it brings with it.

She asked me, upon my turning from her, If she should fay any-thing below of my compliances?

You may fay, That I will do every-thing they would have me do, if they will free me from Mr. Solmes's address.

This

. I.

ish

e-

ter

]:

ity ife

ou

re

ct

we

to ld

ur

by

ay

py

11-br

a ot

y

in ot

16

y

m

is

This is all you defire at present, creeper on! insinuator! [What words she has!] But will not t'other man slame out, and roar most horribly, upon the snatching from his paws a prey he thought himself sure of?

I must let you talk in your own way, or we shall never come to a point. I shall not matter his roaring, as you call it. I will promise him, that, if I ever marry any other man, it shall not be till he is married. And if he be not satisfied with such a condescension, I shall think he ought: And I will give any assurances, that I will neither correspond with him, nor see him. Surely this will do.

But I suppose then you will have no objection to fee and converse, on a civil foot, with Mr. Solmes-as your Father's friend, or fo?

No! I must be permitted to retire to my apartment whenever he comes. I would no more converse with the one, than correspond with the other. That would be to make Mr. Lovelace guilty of some rashness, on a belief, that I broke with him, to have Mr. Solmes.

And so, that wicked wretch is to be allowed such a control over you, that you are not to be civil to your Father's friends, at his own house, for fear of incensing bim!—When this comes to be represented, be so good as to tell me, what is it you expect from it?

Every-thing, I faid, or nothing, as she was pleased to represent it.—Be so good as to give it your interest, Bella, and says further, 'That I will by any means I can, in the Law or otherwise, make over to my Father, to my Uncles, or even to my Brother, all I am entitled to by my Grandsather's Will, as a security for the performance of my promises. And as I shall have no reason to expect any favour from my Father, if I break them, I shall not be worth any-body's having. And surther still, unkindly as my Brother has used me, I will go down to Scotland privately, as his housekeeper [I now see I may

L

I

ed

Ωh

no

21

A

lo

re

I

W

th

de

H

th

fu

01

31

f I may be spared here] if he will promise to treat me no worse than he would do an hired one.—Or

I will go to Florence, to my Coufin Morden, if bis stay in Italy will admit of it. In either case, it may be given out, that I am gone to the other; or to the world's end. I care not whither it is faid I s am gone, or do go.'

Let me ask you, child, if you will give your pretty proposal in writing?

Yes, with all my heart. And I stept to my closet, and wrote to the purpose I have mentioned; and, moreover, the following lines to my Brother.

My dear Brother,

Hope I have made fuch proposals to my Sister, as will be accepted. I am fure they will, if you please to give them your fanction. Let me beg of you for God's fake, that you will. I think myself very unhappy in having incurred your displeasure. No Sister ean love a Brother better than I love you. Pray do not put the worst, but the best constructions upon my propofals, when you have them reported to you. Indeed I mean the best. I have no subterfuges, no arts, no intentions, but to keep to the Letter of them. You shall yourself draw up every-thing into writing, as strong as you can; and I will fign it: And what the Law will not do to enforce it, my Resolution and my Will shall: So that I shall be worth nobody's address, that has not my Papa's consent: Nor shall any person, nor any confideration, induce me to revoke it. You can do more than any-body to reconcile my Parents and Uncles to me. Let me owe this defirable favour to your brotherly interpolition, and you will for ever oblige

Your officted Sifter,

CL. HARLOWE.

And how do you think Bella employed herfelf while I was writing?—Why, playing gently upon my harp-fichord: And bumining to it, to shew her unconcernedness.

When I approached her with what I had written, the arose with an air of levity—Why, Love, you have not written already!—You have, I protest!—O what a ready penwoman !- And may I read it?

If you please. And let me beseech you, my dear Bella, to back these proposals with your good offices: And [folding my uplisted hands; tears, I believe, standing in my eyes] I will love you as never Sister loved another.

Thou art a strange creature, said she; there is no withstanding thee.

at 16

if

it

10

I

y

t,

1

•

r

Ô

n

١.

0

.

t

.

e

e

8

She took the Proposals and Letter; and having read them, burst into an affected Laugh: How wise-ones may be taken in!—Then you did not know, that I was jesting with you all this time!—And so you would have me carry down this pretty piece of non-fense?

Don't fet me be surprised at your seeming unfisterlines, Bella. I hope it is but seeming. There can be no wit in fuch jefting as this.

The folly of the creature!—How natural is it for people, when they fet their hearts upon any thing, to think every-body must see with their eyes !- Pray, dear child, what becomes of your Father's authority here?-Who floops here, the Parent, or the Child?-How does this fquare with the engagements actually agreed upon between your Father and Mr. Solmes? What fecurity, that your Rake will not follow you to the world's end?-Nevertheless, that you may not think that I stand in the way of a Reconciliation on fuch fine terms as these, I will be your messenger this once, and hear what my Papa will fay to it; altho' beforehand I can tell you, these proposals will not aniwer the principal end. 0 6 So

V

ea

di

th

fo

Hervey and my Uncle Harlowe were not gone away: And as they have all engaged to act in concert, meffengers were dispatched to my Uncle and Aunt to desire them to be there to breakfast in the morning.

Monday Night, 11 o'Clock.

I AM afraid I shall not be thought worthy-

Just as I began not to fear I should be thought, worthy of an Answer, Betty rapped at my door, and said, If I were not in bed, she had a Letter for me. I had but just done writing the above dialogue, and stept to the door, with the pen in my hand—Always writing, Miss! said the bold wench: It is admirable how you can get away what you write—But the Fairies, they say, are always at hand to help Lovers.—She retired in so much haste, that had I been disposed, I could not take the notice of this insolence which it deserved.

I inclose my Brother's Letter. He was resolved to let me see, that I should have nothing to expect from his kindness. But surely he will not be permitted to carry every point. The assembling of my friends to-morrow is a good sign: And I will hope something from that, and from proposals so reasonable. And now I will try if any repose will fall to my lot for the remainder of this night.

To Miss CLARY HARLOWE. [Inclosed in the preceding.]

YOUR proposals will be considered by your Father and Mother, and all your Friends, to-morrow morning. What trouble does your shameful forwardness give us all! I wonder you have the courage to write to me, upon whom you are so continually emptying your whole female quiver. I have no patience with you, for reflecting upon me as the aggressor aggressor in a quarrel which owed its beginning to my confideration for you. A TT

1 00000

You have made such consessions in a villain's favour, as ought to cause all your relations to renounce you for ever. For my part, I will not believe any woman in the world, who promises against her avoided inclination. To put it out of your power to ruin yourself is the only way left to prevent your ruin. I did not intend to write; but your too-kind Sister has prevailed upon me. As to your going into Scotland, that day of grace is over.—Nor would I advise, that you should go to grandsather-up your Cousin Morden. Besides, that worthy gentleman might be involved in some satal dispute, upon your account; and then be called the aggressor.

A fine situation you have brought yourself to, to propose to hide yourself from your Rake, and to have falshoods told, to conceal you!—Your confinement, at this rate, is the happiest thing that could befal you. Your Bravo's behaviour at church, looking out for you, is a sufficient indication of his power over you, had you not so shamelesly acknowledged it.

One word for all—Your Parents and Uncles may do as they will: But if, for the honour of the family, I cannot carry this point, I will retire to Scotland, and never see the face of any one of it more.

JA. HARLOWE.

There's a Brother!—There's flaming duty to a Father, and Mother, and Uncles!—But he fees himfelf valued, and made of confequence; and he gives himfelf airs accordingly!—Nevertheles, as I said above, I will hope better things from those who have not the interest my Brother has to keep open these unhappy differences.

Their fearless as bear comes see their Athena

thous boin as elither it happened ebet no was con-

LETTER KLIIL.

and absenced a led to need Tuefday, March 21.

Would you not have thought, my dear Mils Howe, as well as I, that my proposal must have been accepted: And that my Brother, by the last article of his unbrotherly Letter (where he threatens to go to Scotland if it should be hearkened to) was of opinion that it would.

For my part, after I had read the unkind Letter over and over, I concluded, upon the whole, that a Reconciliation upon terms fo disadvantageous to myfelf, as hardly any other person in my case, I dare fay, would have proposed, must be the result of this morning's conference. And in that belief I had begun to give myfelf new trouble in thinking (this difficulty over) how I should be able to pacify Lovelace on that part of my engagement, by which I undertook to break off all correspondence with him, unless my friends should be brought by the interposition of his powerful friends, and any offers they might make (which it was rather his part to fuggest, than mine to intimate) to change their minds.

Thus was I employed, not very agreeably, you may believe, because of the vehemence of the tempers I had to conflict with; when breakfasting-time approached, and my judges began to arrive.

And oh! how my heart fluttered on hearing the chariot of the one, and then of the other, rattle thro' the court-yard, and the hollow-founding footstep giveing notice of each person's stepping out, to take his place on the awful bench which my fancy had formed for them and my other judges!

That, thought I, is my Aunt Hervey's! That my Uncle Harlowe's! Now comes my Uncle Antony! And my imagination made a fourth chariot for the odious

odious Solmes, altho' is happened that he was not there.

And now, thought I, are they all assembled: And now my Brother calls upon my Sister to make her report! Now the hard hearted Bella interlards her speech with invective! Now has she concluded her report! Now they debate upon it!—Now does my Brother slame! Now threaten to go to Scotland! Now is he chidden, and now foothed!

And then I ran thro' the whole conference in my imagination, forming speeches for this person and that, pro and con. till all concluded, as I flattered myfelf, in an acceptance of my conditions, and in giveing directions to have an instrument drawn to tie me up to my good behaviour: While I supposed all agreed to give Solmes a Wise every way more worthy of him, and with ber the promise of my Grandsather's Estate, in case of my forseiture, or dying unmarried, on the righteous condition he proposes to entitle himself to it with me.

And now, thought I, am I to be ordered down to recognize my own proposals. And how shall I look upon my awful judges? How shall I stand the questions of some, the set surliness of others, the returning love of one or two? How greatly shall I be affected!

Then I wept: Then I dried my eyes: Then I practifed at my glass for a look more chearful than my heart.

And now [as any-thing stirred] is my Sister coming to declare the issue of all! Tears gushing again, my heart stuttering as a bird against its wires; drying my eyes again and again to no purpose.

And thus, my Nancy [Excuse the fanciful prolixity] was I employed, and such were my thoughts and imaginations, when I found a very different result from the hopeful conference.

I

1

ti

to

fi

For about Ten o'clock up came my Sister, with an air of cruel triumph, waving her hand with a light fourish

Clary. My Papa is justly incensed, that you should presume to dispute his will, and to make conditions with him. He knows what is best for you: And as you own matters are gone a great way between this hated Lovelace and you, they will believe nothing you say; except you will give the one only instance, that will put them out of doubt of the sincerity of your promises.

What, child, are you surprised? — Cannot you speak?—Then, it seems, you had expected a different issue, had you?—Strange that you could !—With all your acknowledgements and confessions, so cre-editable to your noted prudence!-

were even fixed, and ceased to flow. But upon the hard hearted Bella's proceeding with her airs of infult, Indeed I was mistaken, said I; Indeed I was!

For in you, Bella, I expected, I hoped for, a Sister—

Mhat! interrupted she, with all your mannerly slings, and your despising airs, did you expect, that I was capable of telling stories for you?—Did you think, that when I was asked my own opinion of the sincerity of your declarations, I could not tell them, how far matters had gone hetween you and your Fellow?—When the intention is to bend that stubborn will of yours to your duty, do you think I would deceive them?—Do you think I would encourage them to call you down, to contradict all that I should have invented in your favour?

that's all. I was willing to think, that I had still a Brother and Sister. But I find I am mistaken.

Pretty Mopfa-eyed foul!—was her expression!—

And was it willing to think it had still a Brother and Sifter? And why don't you go on, Clary? [mocking my half-weeping accent] I thought too I had a Father, and Mother, two Uncles, and an Aunt: But I am mif-taken, that's all-Come, Clary, fay this, and it will in part be true, because you have thrown off their authority, and because you respect one vile wretch more than them all.

How have I deserved this at your hands, Sister?-

But I will only fay, I pity you.

And with that disdainful air too, Clary!-None of that bridled neck! None of your scornful pity, Girl!—I beseech you!

This fort of behaviour is natural to you, furely, Bella !- What new talents does it discover in you !-But proceed—If it be a pleasure to you, proceed, Bella. And fince I must not pity you, I will pity myfelf: For nobody else will.

Because you don't, said she-

Hush, Bella, interrupting her, Because I don't deferve it-I know you were going to fay fo. I will fay as you fay in every thing; and that's the way to please you.

Then fay, Lovelace is a villain,

So I will, when I think him fo.

Then you don't think him fo?

Indeed I don't. You did not always, Bella.

And what, Clary, mean you by that? [briffling up to me]-Tell me what you mean by that reflection !

Tell me why you call it a reflection? - What did

I fay?

i letitob eog lisa se Thou art a provoking creature—But what fay you to two or three duels of that wretch's?

I can't tell what to fay, unless I knew the oceafions.

Do you justify duelling at all? I do not: Neither can I help his duelling.

I

.

1

d

t

nS

ci

b

n

fe

11

k

Will you go down, and humble that stubborn spirit of yours to your Mamma?

I faid nothing.

Shall I conduct your Ladyship down? [offering to take my declined hand].

What! not vouchfafe to answer me?

I turned from her in filence.

What! turn your back upon me too!—Shall I bring up your Mamma to you, Love! [following me, and taking my struggling hand] What! not speak yet! Come, my sullen, filent dear, speak one word to me—You must say two very soon to Mr. Solmes, I can tell you that.

Then [gushing out into tears, which I could not hold in longer] they shall be the last words I will ever fpeak.

Well, well [infultingly wiping my averted face with her handkerchief, while her other hand held mine in a ridiculing tone] I am glad any-thing will make thee speak: Then you think you may be brought to speak the two words—Only they are to be the last!—How like a gentle Lovyer from its tender bleeding heart was that!

Ridiculous Bella!

Saucy Clary! [changing her freering tone to an imperious one] But do you think you can humble yourfelf to go down to your Mamma?

I am tired with fuch ftuff as this. Tell me, Bella,

If my Mamma will condefcend to fee me?

Yes, if you can be dutiful at laft.

I can. I will.

But what call you dutiful?

To give up my own inclinations—That's fomething more for you to tell of—in obedience to my Parents commands; and to beg I may not be made miserable with a man that is fitter for any body than for me.

For me, do you mean, Clary?

Why not? fince you have put the question. You have a better opinion of him than I have. My friends, I hope, would not think him too good for me, and not good enough for you. But cannot you tell me, Bella, what is to become of me, without insulting over me thus?—If I must be thus treated, remember, that if I am guilty of any rashness, the usage I meet with will justify it.

So, Clary, you are contriving an excuse, I find, for somewhat that we have not doubted has been in your head a great while.

If it were so, you seem resolved, for your part, and so does my Brother for bis, that I shall not want one.

—But indeed, Bella, I can bear no longer this repetition of the worst part of yesterday's conversation: I desire I may throw myself at my Father's and Mother's seet, and hear from them what their sentence is. I shall at least avoid, by that means, the unsisterly insults I meet with from you.

Hey-day! What, is this you? Is it you, my meek Sifter Clary?

Yes, it is I, Bella; and I will claim the protection due to a child of the family, or to know why I am to be thus treated, when I offer only to preferve to myself the liberty of refusal, which belongs to my Sex; and, to please my Parents, would give up my choice. I have contented myself till now to take seemd-band messengers, and sirst-band insults: You are but my Sister: My Brother is not my Sovereign. And while I have a Father and Mother living, I will not be thus treated by a Brother and Sister, and their servants, all setting upon me, as it should seem, to make me desperate, and to do a rash thing.—I will know, in short, Sister Bella, why I am to be constrained thus?—What is intended by it?—And whether I am to be considered as a child or a shove?

She flood aghaft all this time, partly with real, partly with affected furprife.

th

B

m

ft ju

to

h

U

at

n

th

vi

fu

fu

th

m

th

be

2 1

ha

to

And is it you? Is it indeed you?—Well, Clary, you amaze me! But fince you are so desirous to refer yourself to your Father and Mother, I will go down, and tell them what you say. Your friends are not yet gone, I believe: They shall assemble again; and then you may come down, and plead your own cause in person.

Let me then. But let my Brother and you be abfent. You have made yourselves too much parties against me, to sit as my judges. And I desire to have none of yours or his interpositions. I am sure you could not have represented what I proposed fairly: I am sure you could not. Nor is it possible you should be commissioned to treat me thus.

Well, well, I'll call up my Brother to you.—I will indeed.—He shall justify himself, as well as me.

I defire not to see my Brother, except he will come as a Brother, laying aside the authority he has unjustly assumed over me.

And fo, Clary, it is nothing to him, or to me, is it? that our Sifter shall difgrace her whole family?

As how, Bella, difgrace it?—The man whom you thus freely treat, is a man of birth and fortune: He is a man of parts, and nobly allied.—He was once thought worthy of you; and I wish to Heaven you had had him. I am sure it was not my fault you had not, altho' you treat me thus!

This set her into a slame: I wish I had forborn it.

O how the poor Bella raved! I thought she would have beat me once or twice: And she vowed, her singers itched to do so—But I was not worth her anger . Yet the flamed on the nous guited the same yel

We were heard to be high.—And Betty came up from my Mother to command my Sifter to attend her.

She went down accordingly, threatening me with letting every one know what a violent creature I had thewn my felf to be.

Surquel battens die Tuefday

Tuefday Noon, March 21.

I HAVE as yet heard no more of my Sister: And have not courage enough to insist upon throwing myself at the seet of my Father and Mother, as I thought in my heat of temper I should be able to do. And I am now grown as calm as ever; and were Bella to come up again, as sit to be played upon as before.

I am indeed forry that I fent her from me in such disorder. But my Papa's Letter threatening me with my Uncle Antony's house and chapel, terrifies me strangely; and by their silence I am asraid some new storm is gathering.

d

ey

But what shall I do with this Lovelace? I have just now, by the unsuspected hole in the wall (that I told you of in my Letter by Hannah) got a Letter from him—So uneasy is he for fear I should be prevailed upon in Solmes's favour; so full of menaces, if I am; so resenting the usage I receive [for, how I cannot tell; but he has undoubtedly intelligence of all that is done in the samily]; such protestations of inviolable faith and honour; such vows of reformation; such pressing arguments to escape from this disgraceful confinement—O my Nancy, what shall I do with this Lovelace?—

LETTER XLIV.

Miss CLARISSA HARLOWE, To Miss Howe.

Wednesday Morning, 9 o'clock.

MY Aunt Hervey lay here last night, and is but just gone from me. She came up to me with my Sister. They would not trust my Aunt without this ill-natured witness. When she entered my chamber, I told her, That this visit was a high favour to a poor prisoner in her hard confinement. I kissed her hand. She, kindly saluting me, said, Why this distance, to your Aunt, my dear, who loves you so well?

She

I

Ь

fa

n

no

th

en

ha

off

tu

fur

du

Cl

get

The

bui

Lo

No

mi

her

dies

kno

doo

up

She owned, That she came to expostulate with me, for the peace-sake of the family: For that she could not believe it possible, if I did not conceive myself unkindly treated, that I, who had ever shewn such a sweetness of temper, as well as manners, should be thus resolute, in a point so very near to my Father, and all my friends. My Mother and she were both willing to impute my resolution to the manner I had been begun with; and to my supposing that my Brother had originally more of a hand in the proposals made by Mr. Solmes, than my Father or other friends. In short, sain would my Aunt have surnished me with an excuse to come off my opposition; Bella all the while humming a tune, and opening this Book and that, without meaning; but saying nothing.

After having shewed me, that my opposition could not be of signification, my Father's honour being engaged, my Aunt concluded with enforcing upon me my duty, in stronger terms than I believe she would have done (the circumstances of the case considered) had not my Sifter been present.

It would but be repeating what I have so often mentioned, to give you the arguments that passed on both sides.—So I will only recite what she was pleased to fay, that carried with it a new face.

When she found me inflexible, as she was pleased to call it, she said, For her part she could not but say, that if I were not to have either Mr. Solmes or Mr. Lovelace, and yet, to make my friends easy, must marry, she should not think amiss of Mr. Wyerley. What did I think of Mr. Wyerley?

Ay, Clary, put in my Sifter, what fay you to Mr.

Wyerley?

I saw thro' this immediately. It was said on purpose, I doubted not, to have an argument against me of absolute prepossession in Mr. Lovelace's savour: Since Mr. Wyerley every-where avows his value, even to veneration, for me; and is far less-exceptionable, both in person and mind, than Mr. Solmes: And I was willing to turn the tables, by trying how far Mr. Solmes's terms might be dispensed with; fince the same terms could not be expected from Mr. Wyerley.

I therefore defired to know, Whether my answer, if it should be in favour of Mr. Wyerley, would release me from Mr. Solmes?—For I owned, that I had not the aversion to him, that I had to the other.

Nay, the had no commission to propose such a thing. She only knew, that my Father and Mother would not be easy till Mr. Lovelace's hopes were entirely deseated.

Cunning creature! faid my Sifter

And this, and her joining in the question before, convinced me, that it was a deligned mare for me.

Don't You, dear Madam, said I, put questions that can answer no end, but to support my Brother's schemes against me.—But are there any hopes of an end to my sufferings and disgrace, without having this hated man imposed upon me? Will not what I have offered be accepted? I am sure it sught—I will venture to say That.

Why, Niece, if there be not any such hopes, I presume you don't think yourself absolved from the duty due from a child to her parents?

Yes, said my Sister, I do not doubt but it is Miss Clary's aim, if she does not sly to her Lovelace, to get her Estate into her own hands, and go to live at The Grove, in that independence upon which she builds all her perverseness. And, dear heart! my little Love, how will you then blaze away! Your mamma Norton, your oracle, with your Poor at your gates, mingling so proudly and so meanly with the ragged herd! Resecting, by your ostentation, upon all the Ladies in the county, who do not as you do. This is known to be your scheme! And the Poor without-doors, and Lovelace within, with one hand building up a name, pulling it down with the other!—O what

fr

y

no

po

ref

be fo l had

you

tho

you

fide.

has

wer

to n

it w

what a charming scheme is this !- But let me tell you, my pretty little flighty one, that your Father's living Will shall controul your Grandfather's dead one; and That Estate will be disposed of as your fond Grandfather would have disposed of it, had he lived to see fuch a change in his favourite. In a word, Miss, it will be kept out of your hands, till my Father fees you discreet enough to have the management of it, or till you can dutifully, by Law, tear it from him.

Fie, Miss Harlowe! faid my Aunt: This is not NA LIE VIL pretty to your Sifter.

O Madam, let her go on. This is nothing to what I have borne from Miss Harlowe. She is either commissioned to treat me ill by her Envy, or by an higher authority, to which I must submit. - As to revoking the Estate, what hinders, if I pleased? I know my power? but have not the least thought of exerting. it. Be pleased to let my Father know, that, whatever be the consequence to myself, were he to turn me out of doors (which I should rather he would do. than to be confined and infulted as I am) and were I to be reduced to indigence and want, I would feek no relief that should be contrary to his will.

For that matter, child, faid my Aunt, were you to marry, you must do as your Husband will have you. If that Husband be Mr. Lovelace, he will be glad of any opportunity of further embroiling the families. And, let me tell you, Niece, if he had the respect for you which he pretends to have, he would not throw out defiances as he does. He is known to be a very revengeful man; and were I you, Miss Clary, I should be afraid he would wreak upon me that vengeance, though I had not offended him, which he is continually threatening to pour upon the family.

Mr. Lovelace's threatened vengeance is in return for threatened vengeance. It is not every-body will bear infult, as, of late, I have been forced to bear it.

O how my Sister's face shone with passion!

But

But Mt. Lovelace, proceeded I, as I have faid twenty and twenty times, would be quite out of the question with me, were I to be generously treated!

My Sister said something with great vehemence: But only raising my voice, to be heard, without minding her, Pray, Madam (provokingly interrogated I) was he not known to have been as wild a man, when he was at first introduced into our family, as he now is said to be? Yet then, the common phrases of wild oats, and black oxen, and such-like, were qualifiers; and Marriage, and the Wise's discretion, were to perform wonders—But (turning to my Sister) I find I have said too much.

O thou wicked reflecter!—And what made me abhor him, think you, but the proof of those villainous freedoms that ought to have had the same effect upon you, were you but half so good a creature as you pretend to be?

Proof, did you fay, Bella! I thought that you had not proof?—But you know best.

Was not this very spiteful, my dear?

f

r

V

y

11

ut

Now, Clary, faid she, would I give a thousand pounds to know all that is in thy little rancorous and reflecting heart, at this moment.

I might let you know for a much less sum, and not be afraid of being worse treated than I have been.

Well, young Ladies, I am forry to fee passion run so high between you. You know, Niece (to me) you had not been confined thus to your apartment, could your Mother by condescension, or your Father by authority, have been able to move you. But how can you expect, when there must be a concession on one side, that it should be on theirs? If my Dolly, who has not the hundredth part of your understanding, were thus to set herself up in absolute contradiction to my will, in a point so material, I should not take it well of her—Indeed I should not.

I believe not, Madam: And if Miss Hervey had just Vol. I. P fuch fuch a Brother, and just such a Sister [You may look, Bella!] and if both were to aggravate her Parents, as my Brother and Sister do mine—Then, perhaps, you might use her as I am used: And if she hated the man you proposed to her, and with as much reason as I do Mr. Solmes—

And loved a Rake and Libertine, Miss, as you do

Lovelace, faid my Sifter-

Then might she [continued I, not minding her] beg to be excused from obeying. But yet if she did, and would give you the most solemn assurances, and security besides, that she would never have the man you disliked, against your consent—I dare say, Miss Hervey's Father and Mother would sit down satisfied, and not endeavour to force her Inclinations.

So!-[faid my Sifter, with uplifted hands] Father and Mother now come in for their share!

But if, child, replied my Aunt, I knew she loved a Rake, and suspected that she sought only to gain time, in order to wire-draw me into a consent—

I beg pardon, Madam, for interrupting you; but if Miss Hervey could obtain your consent, what further would be to be faid?

True, child; but she never should. Then, Madam, it never would be.

That I doubt, Niece.

If you do, Madam, can you think confinement and ill usage is the way to prevent the apprehended rashness?

My dear, this fort of intimation would make one but too apprehensive, that there is no trusting to yourfelf, when one knows your inclination

That apprehension, Madam, seems to have been conceived before this intimation, or the least cause for it, was given. Why else the disgraceful confinement I have been laid under?—Let me venture to say, that my sufferings seem to be rather owing to a concerted design to intimidate me [Bella held up her Hands], (knowing there were too good grounds for my oppofition) than to a doubt of my conduct; for, when they were inflicted first, I had given no cause of doubt: Nor should there now be room for any, if my discretion might be trusted to.

My Aunt, after a little hesitation, said, But, confider, my dear, what consusion will be perpetuated in your family, if you marry this hated Lovelace?

And let it be considered, what misery to me, Ma-dem, if I marry that hated Solmes?

Many a young creature has thought she could not love a man, with whom she has afterwards been very happy. Few women, child, marry their first Loves.

That may be the reason there are so few happy Marriages.

But there are few first impressions fit to be encouraged.

I am afraid so too, Madam. I have a very indifferent opinion of light and first impressions. But, as I have often said, all I wish for, is, to have leave to live single.

Indeed you must not, Miss. Your Father and Mother will be unhappy till they see you married, and out of Lovelace's reach.—I am told that you propose to condition with him (so far are matters gone between you) never to have any man, if you have not him.

I know no better way to prevent mischief on all sides, I freely own it—And there is not, if be be out of the question, another man in the world, I can think favourably of.—Nevertheless, I would give all I have in the world, that he were married to some other person—Indeed I would, Bella, for all you put on that smile of incredulity.

May be fo, Clary: But I will smile for all that.

If be be out of the question! repeated my Aunt—So, Miss Clary, I see how it is—I will go down—[Miss Harlowe, shall I follow you?—] And I will endeavour to persuade your Father to let my Sister herself come up: And a happier event may then re-

Depend upon it, Madam, faid my Sifter, This will be the case: My Mother and she will be both in tears; but with this different effect: My Mother will come down softened and cut to the heart; but will leave her favourite hardened, from the advantages she will thin she has over my Mother's tenderness—Why, Madam, it is for this very reason the girl is not admitted into her presence.

Thus she ran on, as she went down stairs.

LETTER XLV.

Miss CLARISSA HARLOWE, To Miss Howe.

MY heart fluttered with the hope and the fear of feeing my Mother, and with the shame and the grief of having given her so much uneasiness. But it needed not: She was not permitted to come. But my Aunt was so good as to return; yet not without my Sister: And, taking my hand, made me sit down by her.

She came, she must own, officiously, she said, this once more; tho' against the opinion of my Father: But knowing and dreading the consequence of my opposition, she could not but come.

She then set forth to me my friends expectations from me; Mr. Solme's riches (three times as rich he came out to be, as any-body had thought him); the settlements proposed; Mr. Lovelace's bad character; their aversion to him; all in a very strong light; but not in a stronger than my Mother had before placed them in. My Mother, surely, could not have given the particulars of what had passed between herself and me: If she had, my Aunt would not have repeated many of the same sentiments, as you will find she did, that had been still more strongly urged, without effect by her venerable Sister.

She said it would break the heart of my Father to have it imagined, that he had not a power over his child; and that, as he thought, for my own good: A child too, whom they had always doated upon!—Dearest, dearest Miss, concluded she, classing her singers, with the most condescending earnestness, let me beg of you, for my sake, for your own sake, for a bundred sakes, to get over this averseness, to give up your prejudices, and make every-one happy and easy once more.—I would kneel to you, my dearest Niece—Nay, I will kneel to you!—

And down she dropt, and I with her, kneeling to her, and beseeching her not to kneel; clasping my arms about her, and bathing her worthy bosom with my tears.

S

e

t

d

n

đ

d

C

O rise! rise! my beloved Aunt, said I: You cut me to the heart with this condescending goodness.

Say then, my dearest Niece, say then, that you will oblige all you friends!—If you love us, I beseech you do—

How can I promise what I can-sooner chuse to die than to perform !-

Say then, my dear, you will consider of it. Say you will but reason with yourself. Give us but hopes. Don't leat me entreat, and thus entreat, in vain. For still she kneeled, and I by her.

What a hard case is mine!—Could I but doubt, I know I could conquer.—That which is an inducement to my friends, is none at all to me—How often, my dearest Aunt, must I repeat the same thing?—Let me but be single—Cannot I live single? Let me be sent, as I have proposed, to Scotland, to Florence; any-whither: Let me be sent a slave to the Indies; any-whither—Any of these, I will consent to. But I cannot, cannot think of giving my vows to a man I cannot endur Well then, rising (Bella filently, with uplisted hands, hands, reproaching my supposed perverseness) I see nothing can prevail with you to oblige us.

What can I do, my dearest Aunt Hervey? What can I do? Were I capable of giving a hope I meant not to enlarge, then could I say, I would consider of your kind advice. But I would rather be thought perverse than insincere. Is there, however, no medium? Can nothing be thought of? Will nothing do, but to have a man who is the more disgussful to me, because he is unjust in the very articles he offers?

Whom now, Clary, faid my Sifter, do you reflect upon? Confider That.

Make not invidious applications of what I fay, Bella. It may not be looked upon in the same light by every one. The giver and the accepter are principally answerable, in an unjust donation. While I think of it in this light, I should be inexcusable to be the latter. But why do I enter upon a supposition of this nature?—My heart, as I have often, often faid, recoils, at the thoughts of the man, in every light .-Whose Father, but mine, agrees upon articles where there is no prospect of a liking? Where the direct contrary is avowed, all along avowed, without the least variation, or shadow of a change of sentiment?-But it is not my Father's doing originally. O my cruel, cruel Brother, to cause a measure to be forc'd upon me, which he would not behave tolerably under, were the like to be offered to him!

The girl is got into her altitudes, Aunt Hervey, faid my Sister. You see, Madam, she spares nobody. Be pleased to let her know what she has to trust to. Nothing is to be done with her. Pray, Madam, pronounce her doom.

My Aunt retir'd to the window, weeping, with my Sister in her hand: I cannot, Indeed I cannot, Miss Harlowe, said she, softly (but yet I heard every word she said): There is great hardship in her case. She

18

F

n

n

1

h

fh

fe

to

So

D

W

W

is a noble child after all. What pity things are gone fo far!—But Mr. Solmes ought to be told to defift.

O Madam, said my Sister, in a kind of loud whisper, are you caught too by the little Siren?—My Mother did well not to come up!—I question whether my Father himself, after his first indignation, would not be turned round by her. Nobody but my Brother can do any-thing with her, I am sure.

Don't think of your Brother's coming up, said my Aunt, still in a low voice—He is too surious. I see no obstinacy, no perverseness in her manner! If your Brother comes, I will not be answerable for the confequences: For I thought twice or thrice she would

O Madam, she has a strong heart!—And you see there is no prevailing with her, tho' you were upon your knees to her.

e

t

e

y

d

My Sifter left my Aunt musing at the window, with her back towards us; and took that opportunity to infult me still more barbarously: For, stepping to my closet, she took up the patterns which my Mother had fent me up, and bringing them to me, the spread them upon the chair by me; and, offering one, and then another, upon her sleeve and shoulder, thus she ran on, with great seeming tranquility, but whisperingly, that my Aunt might not hear her. This, Clary, is a pretty pattern enough: But This is quite charming! I would advise you to make your appearance in it. And This, were I you, should be my wedding night-gown-And This my fecond dreffed suit! Won't you give orders, Love, to have your Grandmother's jewels new-fet? - Or will you think to shew away in the new ones Mr. Solmes intends to prefent to you? He talks of laying out two or three thousand pounds in prefents, child! Dear heart !- How gorgeously will you be array'd !-What! filent, my dear! Mamma Norton's fweet dear! What! filent still?—But, Clary, won't you have a Velvet

lo

b

le

W

ne

en

th

yo

yo

go

for bo

Ou

hap

the car

me

100 wh

dov

you

poo

you

onl

mo

to

F

Velvet Suit? It would cut a great figure in a country church, you know: And the weather may bear it for a month yet to come. Crimson Velvet, suppose! Such a fine complexion as yours, how it would be set off by it! What an agreeable blush would it give you!—High ho! (mocking me; for I sighed to be thus sooled with) And do you sigh, Love?—Well then, as it will be a solemn wedding, what think you of black Velvet, child?—Silent still, Clary!—Black Velvet, so fair as you are, with those charming eyes, gleaming thro' a wintry cloud, like an April Sun!—Does not Lovelace tell you they are charming eyes!—How lovely will you appear to every one!—What! silent still, Love!—But about your Laces, Clary!—

She would have gone on still further, had not my Aunt advanced towards us, wiping her eyes—What! whispering, Ladies! You seem so easy and so pleased, Miss Harlowe, with your private conference, that I hope I shall carry down good news.

I am only giving her my opinion of her patterns, here.—Unask'd indeed; but she seems, by her silence, to approve of my judgment.

O Bella! said I, that Mr. Lovelace had not taken you at your word!—You had before now been exercifing your judgment on your own account: And I had been happy, as well as you! Was it my fault, I pray you, that it was not so?—

O how she raved!

To be so ready to give, Bella, and so loth to take, is not very fair in you.

The poor Bella descended to call names.

Why, Sister, said I, you are as angry, as if there were more in the hint, than possibly might be defigned. My wish is sincere, for both our sakes!—for the whole samily's sake!—And what (good now) is there in it!—Do not, do not, dear Bella, give me cause to suspect, that I have found a reason for your behaviour to me; and which till now was wholly unaccountable from Sister to Sister—

Fie, fie, Clary! faid my Aunt.

My Sifter was more and more outrageous.

O how much fitter, faid I, to be a jest, than a jester!—But, now Bella, turn the glass to you, and see how poorly fits the robe upon your own shoulders, which you have been so unmercifully fixing upon mine!

Fie, fie, Miss Clary! repeated my Aunt.

And fie, fie, likewise, good Madam, to Miss Harlowe, you would say, were you to have heard her barbarous insults!

Let us go, Madam, said my Sister, with great violence; let us leave the creature to swell till she bursts with her own poison—The last time I will ever come near her, in the mind I am in!

It is so easy a thing, returned I, were I to be mean enough to follow an example that is so censurable in the setter of it, to vanquish such a teazing spirit as yours with its only blunt weapons, that I am amazed you will provoke me!—Yet, Bella, since you will go (for she had hurried to the door) forgive me. I forgive you. And you have a double reason to do so, both from eldership, and from the offence so studieurly given to one in affliction. But may you be happy, tho' I never shall! May you never have half the trials I have had! Be this your comfort, that you cannot have a Sister to treat you, as you have treated me!—And so God bless you!

O thou art a-And down she flung without saying what.

r

t

S

, f

k

,

y

e,

'n

r-

1

1

te,

re

e-

w)

ne

ur

lly

ie,

Permit me, Madam, said I to my Aunt, sinking down, and clasping her knees with my arms, to detain you one moment—Not to say any thing about my poor Sister—She is her own punisher—Only to thank you for all your condescending goodness to me. I only beg of you not to impute to obstinacy the immoveableness I have shewn to so tender a friend; and to forgive me every-thing I have said or done amiss

in

in your presence; for it has not proceeded from inward rancour to the poor Bella. But I will be bold to say, that neither bhe, nor my Brother, nor even my Father himself, knows what a heart they have set a bleeding.

I saw, to my comfort, what effect my Sister's abfence wrought for me.—Rise, my noble-minded Niece!—charming creature!—[Those were her kind words] kneel not to me!—Keep to yourself what I now say to you.—I admire you more than I can express—And if you can forbear claiming your Estate, and can resolve to avoid Lovelace, you will continue to be the greatest miracle I ever knew at your years—But I must hasten down after your Sister.—These are my last words to you: 'Conform to your Father's will, 'if you possibly can. How meritorious will it be in 'you to do so! Pray to God to enable you to conform. You don't know what may be done.'

Only, my dear Aunt, one word, one word more (for she was going)—Speak all you can for my dear Mrs. Norton. She is but low in the world: Should ill health overtake her, she may not know how to live without my Mamma's favour. I shall have no means to help her; for I will want necessaries before I will affert my right: And I do assure you, she has said so many things to me in behalf of my submitting to my Father's will, that her arguments have not a little contributed to make me resolve to avoid the extremities, which nevertheless I pray to God they do not at lost force upon me. And yet they deprive me of her Advice, and think unjustly of one of the most excellent of women.

I am glad to hear you say This: And take This, and This, and This, my charming Niece (for so she called me almost at every word; kissing me earnestly, and clasping her arms about my neck): And God protect you, and direct you! But you must submit: Indeed you must. Some one day in a month from This, is all the choice that is left you.

mo

LE

coi

wi

the

we

good pre exc of that Cla paffi hear

fona

to f mifr of t fays pion now obft temp

I.

n-

old

en fet

b-

ce!

s ay

nd re-

he

t I

ill,

in

n-

ore

ear

uld

ive

ins

vill

fo

my

tle

ni-

t at

her

el-

his,

the

ly,

ro-

eed

all

And this, I suppose, was the doom my Sister called for; none yet worse than what had been pronounced upon me before.

She repeated these last sentences louder than the former. And remember, Miss, added she, it is your duty to comply'—And down she went, leaving me with my heart full, and my eyes running over.

The very repetition of this, fills me with almost equal concern, to that which I felt at the time.

I must lay down my pen. Missinesses which give to my deluged eye the appearance of all the colours in the rainbow, will not permit me to write on.

Wednesday, Five o'clock.

I WILL now add a few lines—My Aunt, as she went down from me, was met at the foot of the stairs by my Sister, who seemed to think she had staid a good while after her: And hearing her last words prescribing to me implicit duty, praised her for it, and exclaimed against my obstinacy. Did you ever hear of such perverseness, Madam? said she: Could you have thought, that your Clarissa, and every-body's Clarissa, was a such a girl?—And who, as you said, is to submit, her Father or she?

My Aunt said something in answer to her, compassionating me, as I thought, by her accent: But I heard not the words.

Such a strange perseverance in a measure so unreafonable!—But my Brother and Sister are continually misrepresenting all I say and do; and I am deprived of the opportunity of desending myself!—My Sister says (a), that had they thought me such a championess, they would not have engaged with me: And now, not knowing how to reconcile my supposed obstinacy with my general character, and natural temper, they seem to hope to tire me out, and resolve to vary their measures accordingly. My Brother, you fee (a), is determined to carry his point, or to abandon Harlowe-place, and never to fee it more .- So they are to lose a Son, or to conquer a Daughter-the perverseft and most ungrateful that ever Parents had! -This is the light he places things in: And has undertaken, it feems, to subdue me, if his advice be followed. It will be further tried; of that I am convinced; and what will be their next measure, who can divine?

I shall dispatch, with this, my Answer to yours of Sunday last, begun on Monday (b); but which is not vet quite finished. It is too long to copy: I have not time for it. In it I have been very free with you, my dear, in more places than one. I cannot fay, that I am pleased with all I have written-Yet will not now alter it .- My mind is not at ease enough for the fubject .- Don't be angry with me. Yet, if you can excuse one or two passages, it will be, because they were written by the first state of the

Your CLARISSA HARLOWE,

(a) In his Letter, p. 301. (b) See Letter xl.

Lett

th

H

en

tu

jeć

VII.

VIII.

X. N. pro

XI. (

XIII.

XV.

Bla

He XII.

He vifi

VI.

11.1

END OF VOL. I.

both to a relation of the old life agranding had you will be read a wear a set that a wife out to and the converge some carried and the first the same

To make always a solution also provide with the work of

ber. Mry fire to the to the test of and to being and pic constrail with the true believes to many three with restrict and anticides back and many death as a co roop and of rapidus in published his onf there was in sufficient manufaction support the same to the first the time

CONTENTS of Vol. I.

1. MISS Howe, To Mifs Clariffa Harlowe. Defires from her the particulars of the Rencounter between Mr. Lovelace and her Brother; and of the usage she receives upon it: Also the whole of her Story from the time Lovelace was introduced as a Suitor to ber Sifter Arabella. Admires her great qualities, and glories in the friendship between them.

II. III. IV. Clariffa, To Mifs Howe. Gives the requested particulars .-Together with the grounds of her Brother's and Sifter's ill will to her; and of the animosity between her Brother and Lovelace .- Her Mother connives at the private correspondence between ber and Lovelare, for the fake of preventing greater evils. Character of Lovelace, from an Enemy.—Copy of the preamble to her Grandfather's Will.

V. F. om the same. Her Father, Mother, Brother, briefly characterized. Her Brother's consequence in the family. Wishes Miss Howe had encouraged ber Brother's address: Endeavours to find excuses for ber Father's ill temper, and for ber Mother's passiveness.

VI. From the same. Mr. Symmes, Mr. Mullins. Mr. Wyerley, in turn, proposed to her, in malice to Lovelace; and, on their being rejected, Mr. Solmes. Leave given her to visit Miss Howe for a few days. Her Brother's insolent behaviour upon it.

VII. From the same. The harsh reception she meets with on her return from Miss Howe. Solmes's first visit.

VIII. From the fame. All her family determined in Solmes's favour. Her aversion to him. She rejects him, and is forbid going to church, vifiting, receiving vifits, or writing to any body out of the house.

IX. From the fame. Her expedient to carry on a private correspondence with Miss Howe. Regrets the necessity she is laid under to take such a clandeftine step.

X. Miss Howe, To Clarissa. Inveighs against the Harlowe family for proposing such a man as Solmes. Characterizes them. Is jealous of Antony Harlowe's vifits to her Mother. Raillies her friend on her supposed regard to Lovelace.

XI. Clarisso, To Miss Horoe. Is nettled and alarmed at her raillery.

Her reasons for not giving way to a passion for Lovelace.

XII. Mifs Howe in Reply. Continues her raillery. Gives Lovelace's character from Mrs. Fortescue.

XIII. XIV. Clariffa, To Miss Howe. The views of ber Family in favouring the address of Solmes. Her Brother's and Sifter's triumph upon the difficulties into which they have plunged her.

XV. Miss Howe, To Clariffa. She accounts for Arabella's malice. Blames her for having given up the power over the Estate left her by her Grandfather. Vol. I.

XVI.

XVI. XVII. Clariffa, To Mifs Howe. Offends her Father by her behaviour to Solmes in his presence. Tender conversation between her Mother and her .- Offers to give up all I boughts of Lovelace, if the may be freed from Solmes's address. Substance of one of Lovelace's Letters, of her Answer, and of his Reply. Makes a proposal. Her Mother goes down with it.

XVIII. From the same. The proposal rejected. Her Mother affects feverity to her. Another interesting conversation between them.

XIX. From the fame. Her dutiful motives for putting her Estate into her Father's power. Why she thinks she ought not to have Solmes. Afflicted on her Mother's account.

XX. XXI. From the same. Another conference with her Mother, who leaves her in Anger. - She goes down to beg her favour. Solmes comes in. She offers to withdraw; but is forbid. What follows upon it.

XXII. From the same. Substance of a Letter from Lovelace. She defires leave to go to church. Is referred to her Brother, and infultingly refused by him. Her Letter to him. His Answer.

XXIII. XXIV. XXV. From the same. Her faithful Hannah disgracefully dismissed. Betty Barnes, her Sister's maid, set over her .- A Letter from her Brother, forbidding her to appear in the presence of any of her Relations without leave. Her Answer .- Writes to her Mother. Her Mother's Answer. Writes to her Father. His Answer.

XXVI. From the fame. Is defirous to know the opinion Lord M's family have of her. Substance of a Letter from Lovelace, resenting the indignities he receives from her Relations. She freely acquaints him, that be bas nothing to expect from ber contrary to her duty. Infiles that his next Letter shall be his last.

XXVII. Miss Howe, To Clarissa. Advises her to resume her Estate. Her fatirical description of Solmes. Raillies her on her curiofity to know what opinion Lord M. and his family have of her. Ascribes to the difference in each of their tempers their mutual Love. Gives the particulars of a conversation between her Mother and her, on Clarissa's case. Reslects on the Harlowe family, and particularly on Mrs. Harlowe, for her passiveness.

XXVIII. Clariffa. In Answer. Chides her for the liberties she takes with her Relations. Particularly defends her Mother. Chides her also for her lively airs to her own Mother. Defires her to treat her freely; but wishes not that she should impute Love to her: And why.

XXIX. From the same. Her expostulatory Letter to her Brother and Sifter. Their Answers.

XXX. From the same. Exceedingly angry with Lovelace, on his coming to their church. Reflections on Pride, &c.

XXXI. Mr. Lovelace, To John Belford, Esq; Pride, Revenge, Love, Ambition, or a Defire of Conquest, his avorwedly predominant paffions. His early vow to ruin as many of the Fair Sex as he can get into his power. His pretence for it. Breathes revenge against the Harlowe family. Glories in his contrivances. Is passionately in Love with Clariffa. His high notions of her beauty and merit. Yet is ine censed against her for preferring ber own Relations to him, Clears ber, bosverung bowever, of intentional Pride, Scorn, Haughtiness, or Want of Sensibility. What a triumph over the Sex, and over her whole Family, if he can carry off a Lady so watchful and so prudent! Is resolved, if he cannot have the Sister, to carry off the Brother. Libertine as he is, can have no thoughts of any other avoman but Clarissa. Warns Belford, Mowbray, Tourville, and Belton, to hold themselves in readiness to obey his summons, on the likelihood there is of room for what he calls glorious mischief.

XXXII. XXXIII. Clariffa, To Mis Howe. Copies of her Letters to her two Uncles; and of their characteristic Answer.—Her expostulatory Letter to Solmes. His Answer. An infolent Letter from her Brother, on her writing to Solmes.

XXXIV. Loveluce, To Belford. He directs him to come down to him.

For what end. Description of the poor inn he puts up at in disguise; and of the innocent Daughter there, whom he calls his Rosebud. He resolves to spare her. Pride and policy bis motives, and not principle. Ingenuous reslections on his own vicious disposition. He had been a rogue, he says, had he been a plough-boy. Resolves on an act of generally to his Rosebud, by way of atonement, as be calls it, for some of his bad actions; and for other reasons which appear in the fequel.

6-her be e's

ler

efs

ite

es.

ho

nes

he

ilt-

ce-

-A of

hep

fa-

the

m, ills

te.

bes

ve3

on

on kes

her

het

hy.

and

ing

syc.

paf-

nto

lar-

ove

ine

ber,

XXXV. From the same. His artful contrivances and dealings with Jofeph Leman. His Revenge and his Love uppermost by turns. If the latter succeeds not, he vows that the Harlowes shall feel the former, although for it be become an exile from his country for ever. He will throw himself into Clarissa's presence in the Woodhouse. If he thought he had no prospect of her favour, he would attempt to carry her off: That, he says, would be a Rape worthy of a Jupiter. The Arts he is resolved to practife when he sees her, in order to engage her future reliance upon his honour.

** XXXVI. Clariffa, To Mifs Howe. Lovelace in difguife surprises her in the Woodhouse. Her terrors on first seeing him. He greatly engages her confidence (as be bad designed) by his respectful behaviour.

XXXVII. Miss Howe, To Carifia. After raillying her on her not readily owning the passion which she supposes she has for Lovelace, she desires to know how far she thinks him eligible for his best qualities, how far rejectable for his worft.

XXXVIII. XXXIX. Clariffa, To Miss Howe. She disclaims tyranny to a man who respects her. Her unhappy situation to be considered, in which the imputed Love is held by her Parents to be an undutiful, and therefore a criminal passion, and where the supposed object of it is a man of faulty morals.—Is interrupted by a visit from Mrs. Norton, who is sent up to her to influence her in Solmes's favour. An affecting conversation between them. What passes upon it, and after it.

XL. From the same. Resumes the requested subject. What fort of Man she could have preserved to Mr. Lovelace. Arguments she has used to herself in his favour, and in his disfavour. Frankly owns, that were he now a moral man, she would preserve him to all the men she ever saw. Yet is persuaded, that she could freely give up the one man, to get rid of the other, as the bad offered to ber friends. Her delicacy affected by Mis Howe's raillery: And why. Gives her opinion of the force which Figure or Person may be allowed to have upon her Sex.

XLI. From the same. A Letter from her Mother (with patterns of rich filks) in which she intreats her to comply with all their wishes. What ought to be the principal view of a good Wife in adorning her person. Her distress. Begs leave to wait upon her Mother alone. Her Father's angry Letter, ordering her to prepare for her Wedding-day. Solmes requests to see her. She refuses. All in tumults below upon it. Her Brother and Sister desire that she may be left to their management.

XLII. From the same. A very warm dialogue between her Sister and her. Her Sister's envy, unnatural behaviour, and violence. Clarista fends down proposals in writing to her Friends, and a Letter to her Brother. His insolent answer; in which he tells her, that her proposals will be considered in full assembly, next morning; but that, if they shall be complied with, he will retire to Scotland, and never more return to Harlowe Place.

XLIII. From the fame. Hardly doubts but her proposals with the accepted. Paints to herfelf, as her relations arrive one by one, what their deliberations, and the result of them, will be, when they are all affembled. Her Proposals rejected. Her Sister's cruel insults on the occasion produce another warm dialogue between them. Her Sister leaves her in a sury. She is greatly disturbed at the contents of a Letter from Lovelace.

XLIV. From the fame. Her Aunt Hervey accompanied by her Sifter, makes her a vifit. Further infults from her Sifter. Her Aunt's fruitless pleas in Solmes's favour.

XI.V. From the same. Another visit from her Aunt and Sister. The latter spitefully insults her with the patterns. A tender scene between her Aunt and her in Arabella's absence. She endeavours to account for the inflexibility of her Parents and Uncles.

10 NO 69

IND OF VOL. 1

energy that the control of the contr to ve succeed to Milliance. A recommission to bloom to be to be succeeded to be succeeded to the succeeded t commendate provide the blood of the control of the

